Administration Silver Plan Splits House After Welcome to Roosevelt

Rainey Denounces Gold Bloc; Seeks Foes' Objective.

Huge Devaluation Profits Censured

101 Sign Fiesinger's Petition Asking Metal Purchase.

By Robert C. Albright.

The same House of Representatives that turned out in festive mood yesterday morning to welcome President Roosevelt home, last night was in throes of rebellion against Administration silver policies, and generally at odds with the White House on money and other issues.

Scarcely was the President well settled at the other end of the Avenue before Speaker Rainey, speaking for House silverites, issued a hot denunciation of what he characterized as the "gold bloc," and demanded an investigation of silver opposition.

Slapping back at Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and Ferdinand Pecora, who Thursday directed further surveys into holdings of silver stocks, Representative Morton Dies, of Texas, and Representative William L. Fiesinger, of Ohio (Democrats), echoed the demand for a "gold bloc" inquiry.

$2,000,000 Profits Charged.

Representative Dies announced he is drafting a resolution for a probe into "what's behind this silver opposition." Representative Fiesinger charged some banks have made as high as $2,000,000 in "profits" through buying foreign gold and pocketing the devaluation difference.

Congressional dissension over Administration money policies spread to the House Banking Committee, where a meeting was called for Tuesday to vote on the Goldsborough bill for a permanent monetary authority—a measure vehemently opposed by Secretary Morgenthau and other Administration officials.

Outside of the strong silver sentiment on both sides of the Capitol, the President found the Congressional inflation threat well under control, with the Frazier-Lemke bill, proposing greenbacks supported by farm mortgages, and the McLeod bill, for closed bank

10,000 in Riot At Baby's Rites

Storm Chapel to View Body of Girl Victim of Boy Abductor.

Chicago, April 13 (AP).—Through a screaming, clawing mob of 10,000 persons, the body of 2½-year-old Dorette Zietlow, victim of a 13-year-old abductor, was carried from a flower-filled chapel today, placed in a white hearse and driven away to be buried in Concordia Cemetery.

The simple last rites were disrupted by the frenzied mob of spectators.

When word was sent out that no more would be admitted to view the body the line, which extended eight abreast in orderly fashion for two blocks, stormed the chapel.

The mob, mostly women and children, defied the efforts of police to maintain order. An additional 25 policemen finally cleared a path from the chapel to the hearse and Boy Scout pallbearers carried out their tiny burden.

Rev. Henry E. Lambrecht, of the German Lutheran denomination, who conducted the chapel services, said:

"It is not for us to pass judgment on the boy who committed this crime. But we are told he was held before for molesting little girls, that he had been in custody, and had been discharged without supervision. The major portion of the blame rests with the institution that returned the boy to society without supervision."

Gold Imports Grow.

New York, April 13 (AP).—Today's gold statement of the New York Federal Reserve Bank showed imports of $1,682,900 from Canada. The bank stated it had been notified of the arrival in San Francisco of $941,000 in gold from China.

'Tough Guy' President 'Kids' Hill, Starts Work

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Manifesting the same exhilaration that characterized his yachting vacation, President Roosevelt yesterday began picking up the threads of Government after an unprecedented welcome at Union Station by some 200 members of Congress.

"I am a tough guy," he told them facetiously in an impromptu, train-end talk that sent the same legislators that stampeded against his veterans' veto humbly back to Capitol Hill, impressed with his desire for an early adjournment.

Still smiling over a reception whose like none could recall, Mr. Roosevelt immediately sent the

100,000 in Oil Union Await Wage Strike

Southern Coal Operators to Take Pay Dispute to Roosevelt.

Threat of a strike among 100,000 oil workers was made yesterday by Harvey C. Freming, president of the International Oil Workers Union, should regional wage differentials proposed by the oil planning and coordination board be adopted.

"We are prepared to call a general strike—a National strike," he declared to the petroleum labor policy board of the Oil Administration.

Meanwhile, unrest in the Southern coal fields continued and operators, who have been in Washington all week, declared their intention of seeking an audience with President Roosevelt.

They came here in protest against Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson's order, effective April 1, which virtually wiped out sectional wage differentials and raised wages in some cases by more than a third.

After three days of hearings, during which they made plain their intention to carry their fight to court, if necessary, nothing was accomplished. Since then they have conferred privately with NRA officials, who confess themselves powerless to act in the absence of the administrator.

At the oil hearing, Freming declared that if the differences be-

Insull Sails; U. S. Prisoner Jokes Guard

Turkish Police Turn Over Famous Fugitive and Get Receipt.

S. S. Exilona, bound for the United States from Smyrna, Turkey, April 13 (AP).—Samuel Insull dropped his role of man without a country and fugitive from American courts tonight and sailed for the United States, the prisoner of an American official.

The 74-year-old head of the wrecked Insull Utilities was formally delivered to Burton Y. Berry, of the Istanbul American Embassy, 18 months after he fled from fraud charges at home and two weeks after Turkish officials arrested him.

In a brief ceremony, the Turkish police commissioner, Nail Bey, handed the former multimillionaire over to Berry, who gave the officer a receipt, signed by himself and the Exilona's captain, and a copy of the Presidential warrant for the Chicagoan's detention.

Insull was formally extradited aboard the ship at 10:50 p. m. It was his first time under an American flag since he sought refuge in Greece a year and a half ago. He stood disconsolate, witnessing the transfer.

He arrived by train from Panderma, Turkey, this evening after a 175-mile journey that started at 6:45 a. m. With him were Nail Bey, Berry and five Turkish detectives. He was placed in an automobile waiting at the station and taken to a launch, in which he was hurried to this steamer standing off the port.

As soon as the extradition proceedings were completed his Turk-

(Associated Press.)

Student "Pacifist" demonstrations were anything but peaceful on a dozen Eastern campuses yesterday.

In New York, Cambridge, Worcester, Springfield and Amherst, Mass.; Syracuse, and Baltimore, the meetings proceeded with oratory and catcalls, accompanied by streams of water, eggs and overripe tomatoes.

But nobody, anywhere, was hurt.

The "antiwar" strike, supposed to have been Nation-wide, was called by the Student League for Industrial Democracy, the National Student League and sympathetic groups.

Grapefruit and onion barrages marked the demonstration at Harvard, attended by 2,000. It might have been peaceful except for the unscheduled attendance of the Mullins Chowder Club and the Harvard Marching Club. They came shouting "we want war" and "down with peace" and got both.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., was in the middle of the melee, smiling merrily, when a car appeared on the outskirts of the crowd and the President's son, a freshman, was hustled into it by one of the Harvard yard police.

In New York, students marched on three campuses—City College, Columbia University and Hunter College for Women. The women's meeting was orderly; the others were not.

Undergraduates at Johns Hopkins, Baltimore, had a meeting, but little peace. Some present were more warlike than otherwise and brought fruit and vegetables. Somebody finally cooled Pacifists and patriots alike with a fire hose thrust through a window.

Jail Raided, Guns Taken By Dillinger

Pistols and Steel Vests Stolen as Posses Comb State.

Warsaw, Ind., April 13 (U.P.). John Dillinger, the Mad Dog of the Middle West, was being sought by posses throughout northern Indiana today after he and a companion, in the early hours of this morning, had executed a bold raid on the Warsaw Town Hall and Jail.

At large since he fled from the Crown Point (Ind.) Jail more than a month ago, the outlaw turned up in Warsaw before dawn, overpowered a policeman by threatening him with a machine gun, stole two bulletproof vests and two pistols and fled.

Every available police officer in northern Indiana was mustered as news of the daring coup spread over the Midwest. Blockades were thrown up along highways. Posses, armed with rifles, shotguns and pistols, cruised the by-roads.

Policeman Invites Death.

The story of Dillinger's latest exploit—one of a series of spectacular and defiant sorties in the face of outraged law-enforcement agencies—was told by Judd Pittinger, latest small-town policeman to bump up against the desperado and his companion.

Pittinger risked death by seizing the muzzle of Dillinger's machine gun and thrusting it into the air, but he was powerless because the outlaw's companion also carried a "Tommy gun."

The Warsaw policeman escaped from the two men, who had decided to kidnap him, by slamming a door in their faces in the Town Hall and running into the street. Before he could get aid, however, Dillinger and his confederate had roared away in a large blue sedan.

Pittinger said he recognized Dillinger's companion as Homer Van Meter, an Indiana parole violator.

"There are only two police officers on duty at night here," Pittinger said, "and I was walking along Buffalo street when two men came up to me. They were swaggering across the street and I saw they had machine guns. When they came closer, I recognized Dillinger.

"Dillinger stuck the muzzle of his machine gun into my stomach and said that they wanted those bulletproof vests in the police station.

"I grabbed the muzzle of the gun and forced it into the air, but Van Meter had another machine gun on me from behind.

Called "Damned Fool."

"Dillinger cussed when I shoved his gun away and he said, 'Don't try to get funny, copper!'

"I asked Dillinger if his gun would shoot, and he asked me what I thought he was carrying it for. Just then the clip fell out of the machine gun, but Van Meter had a gun on me and I hesitated about pulling my revolver. Dillinger put the clip back in his gun.

"The odds were against me, so I gave up and said I would go along with them. We started down an alley and toward the City Hall.

"While we were walking along, one on each side of me, Dillinger said I was the biggest damned fool he ever saw. Van Meter grabbed my gun out of its holster and cracked me over the head with it.

"When we got to the Town Hall, where the police station is, they took me upstairs and we went into

Hiccough Victim, Girl, Is Near Death

Stricken 80 Days, Doctors Fight to Save Her.

Springfield, Ohio, April 13 (AP).—Opening her eyes for brief intervals, 18-year-old Dorothy Floyd smiled wanly today at physicians who fought to save her life from convulsions caused by hiccoughs that have gripped her for 80 days.

There was no material change in the condition of the girl as she lapsed into unconsciousness part of the time.

Physicians expressed fear for her life. A tentative diagnosis disclosed that excessive lime deposits irritating her nerves were responsible for the girl's condition.

Union Hall Bar Picketed As "Unfair to Labor"

Chicago, April 13 (AP).—In front of union headquarters on Ashland boulevard, pickets walked up and down today carrying signs, "This place is unfair to organized labor."

Machinists' hall—the union headquarters—was not being picketed, as it appeared to passersby, but only the bar installed there. It was charged that the bartenders were nonunion men.

Palestine Desperado Is Captured in Cave

Jerusalem, April 13 (AP).—The bandit Abujilda, one of Palestine's most notorious terrorists, was captured in a cave tonight after exchanging shots with police.

He is wanted on several murder charges, involving the deaths of police and constables, and a series of highway robberies in the Nablus district.

Jury Indicts Rail Magnate In Bank Case

O. P. Van Sweringen, J. R. Nutt Accused in Cleveland.

'Window-Dressing' Deals Charged in Bond Transactions.

Cleveland, Ohio, April 13 (U.P.).—O. P. Van Sweringen, one of the brothers of railroading fame, and two former officials of the closed Union Trust Co., were named in fraud indictments returned today by the grand jury.

Indicted with Van Sweringen were Joseph R. Nutt, chairman of the Union Trust board of directors when it closed a year ago, and Wilbur M. Baldwin, former president of the bank.

The indictments were based on an alleged "window dressing" transaction whereby the Union Trust in 1931 bolstered its assets and deposits $10,000,000 each through a "paper purchase" of Government bonds from the Van Sweringen corporation.

Former G. O. P. Treasurer.

Nutt, former treasurer of the Republican National Committee, became president of the Union Trust in 1918, and held that position until March, 1930, when, after a reorganization, he relinquished the presidency to Baldwin and became chairman of the board.

Today's indictment is the second against Baldwin. He and Kenyon V. Painter, largest stockholder in the bank, were charged jointly by the grand jury a week ago with misapplication of bank funds through loans to Painter.

Van Sweringen had no official connection with the Union Trust, but the Van Sweringen brothers, O. P. and M. J., and their many railroad companies were heavy borrowers from the bank.

The Union Trust Co. acted as their depository while the brothers built up their huge railroad and real estate empire. Loans to the Van Sweringens totaling more than $14,000,000 were handled by the Union Trust, with other banks participating.

Probe Led to Morgan.

State examiners discovered the alleged "window dressing" transaction after the Union Trust had been placed in the hands of a liquidator. Subsequent investigation carried auditors through a maze of books and records showing transactions between the Union Trust and the Van Sweringens. The trail led into records of the Van Sweringen Corporation and various subsidiaries, and finally into the offices of J. P. Morgan & Co., in New York.

Responsibility for devising the transaction was laid to Nutt. It apparently was made necessary in the fall of 1931, when a financial statement was due after months of heavy withdrawals in deposits. The transaction was culminated on the day

Jig's Up for Jigs, Wales' Dog; Police Are on Its Trail

Windsor, England, April 13 (AP).—It was a dog's life for canines on Berkshire and Surrey bypaths today because Police were seeking Jigs, the Prince of Wales' favorite terrier.

Jigs, a roguish looking little cairn that—rumor has it—sleeps in the royal bedroom whenever he feels like it, has been A. W. O. L. since Thursday night, when he disappeared from Fort Belvedere, the prince's country house.

While authorities of the two counties combed the roadways, employes of the royal estate beat the bushes in the belief that the black bewhiskered cairn might be lost there and searchers kept telephone lines to Glasgow busy informing Wales of the progress.

Corn Distillery Permit Sought

Virginian Plans to Build Plant on Farm.

Richmond, April 13 (Spl.).—J. B. Worsham, Powhatan County farmer, today announced that he would seek a permit from the State Alcoholic Beverage Control Board to build a distillery for making corn whisky on his brother's farm.

The plant would have a capacity of 5,000 gallons per year. The corn will be turned over to the board for sale. Worsham is the second Virginian to seek such a license, M. H. Mullen, of Highland Springs, having announced he would seek a permit.

One Killed as Truck Rolls Off Mountain

Waynesboro, Pa., April 13 (Spl.). Ellis H. Randall, 29, Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, was killed today when a truck operated by Gordon F. Luce, 24, Perryville, Ohio, crashed on the Lincoln highway, west of Fort Loudon, near here.

Luce was operating a motor express of Ashtabula, Ohio. Descending the Tuscarora Mountain, he lost control of the truck, which struck guard rails and then rolled down the mountainside 60 feet. Luce is in a hospital, suffering from shock.

Senate Votes Tax Bill, Publicity on Returns; Billion Libertys Called

Refunding Bonds Will Be Offered

Redemption October 15 Indicates Stronger Public Credit.

Treasury officials moved to refinance the National debt at lower interest rates yesterday by calling for redemption October 15 an additional $1,200,000,000 of outstanding Fourth Liberty Loan 4¼ per cent bonds.

Decision to call in the securities was reached at a Cabinet meeting held soon after President Roosevelt's return from his yachting cruise. The action was believed to reflect the Government's confidence that it could refund the securities into lower interest-bearing bonds.

Refunding of $1,700,000,000 in previously called bonds at interest rates due to produce an annual saving of nearly $17,000,000 was successfully completed Thursday.

Experts estimated approximately $4,300,000,000 of Fourth Liberty Loan 4¼ bonds would be outstanding after today and the calling of $1,200,000,000 of the bonds ultimately would reduce to $3,100,000,000 the original war-time issue of nearly $7,000,000,000.

Last Date for Call.

With six months' notice required in calling for redemption of the Fourth Liberties, today would have been the last on which the Treasury could have called additional bonds for redemption October 15, the next interest date.

Called for redemption were all bonds bearing serial numbers ending in the digits 8 or 2. Bonds with digits ending in 0, 1 or 9 were called six months ago for redemption today. Most of those, however, have been refunded into lower interest-bearing securities.

Secretary Morgenthau determined the bonds to be called by drawing lots in a simple ceremony before a group of aids and newspapermen.

"I suppose you people have seen this sort of thing done before," he commented as he picked an envelope out of a bowl containing several unmarked documents. He handed it to an assistant, who read off the numbers.

"We will pay off your bonds in cash October 15."

Represents New Step.

That was the purport of the Government's announcement. It was significant in that it represented a new step of the Government to reduce annual interest charges now approaching $1,000,000,000 annually.

Observers presumed that with continuation of recent improvement in Government credit and general bond market conditions the holders of the called bonds would be offered through the summer the privilege of exchanging them for lower-interest-bearing issues instead of accepting cash October 15.

That was the procedure followed last October, when $1,875,000,000 in bonds were called for redemption today. At the time of the call holders were invited to exchange their securities for new 10 or 12 year bonds bearing 4½ per cent the first year and 3¼ per cent thereafter. About $872,000,000 were exchanged. Straight 3½ per cent 10 to 12 year bonds were offered for the unchanged bonds several weeks ago and up to yesterday holders of $797,000,000 additional had accepted.

The transactions represented exchange of $1,669,000,000 in previously called bonds for lower-interest-bearing securities and left $206,000,000 to be paid off in cash today.

Treasury officials will announce later the exact figure at which the additional called Libertys are to be refinanced.

Parking Ban Test For Month Hits Seventh, F and G

Parking on Seventh, F and G streets in the downtown area from 8 a. m. until 6 p. m. was banned yesterday for a month by the District Commissioners.

The ban, an experimental measure, will go into effect this morning. It applies specifically to Seventh street, between Pennsylvania and New York avenues; F street, between Fifth and Seventh and Ninth and Fourteenth streets, and G street, between Fifth and Fifteenth streets.

The Commissioners' action was approval of the recommendation of Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer. It was enacted over protests of the Board of Trade, Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

If after 30 days the plan has been deemed a success by traffic experts it will probably be made permanent and extended to other streets in the downtown area.

Commercial vehicles will be exempt from the ban, Van Duzer said.

Share in Fund Misuse Is Laid To Cannon Aid

Bishop Quoted as Saying He Had Destroyed All Files and Letters.

By Frank Getty.

A statement, allegedly made by Bishop James Cannon, jr., that he destroyed his correspondence before leaving on a Mediterranean cruise so that no one could delve into his affairs was read in his trial in District of Columbia Supreme Court yesterday.

John J. Wilson, Government prosecutor, read the statement, alleged to have been made by Bishop Cannon in 1931.

"I knew that set I had to deal with down in Virginia," the bishop's alleged statement said, adding that he "destroyed all the files and correspondence I could lay my hands on, so that if anything happened to me on the Mediterranean cruise, no one could delve into my affairs."

Miss Ada Burrough's alleged part in the conspiracy to violate the Federal corrupt practices act, with which she and Bishop Cannon are charged, was also stressed by the Government yesterday.

Seek to Link Her Part.

With the aid of a handwriting expert and a statement made by the bishop in the United States attorney's office here shortly before the defendants were indicted in October, 1931, the prosecution sought to link the phlegmatic, spectacled "saintly little woman from Virginia" with Cannon's alleged misappropriation of campaign contributions and the failure to report them to the House of Representatives.

Through a barrage of objections by the defense—one of which drew a stern admonition from Justice Peyton Gordon and a hearty chuckle from the bishop—Assistant U. S. Attorney Wilson launched yesterday upon the all-important effort to convince the jury Miss Burroughs conspired with her employer to conceal at least part of the $65,300 contribution by E. C. Jameson, New York insurance man, to the defeat of Al Smith in 1928.

Admitting that Miss Burroughs, as treasurer of the "Headquarters Committee, Anti-Smith Democrats,"

Progressive Bloc Wins Major Victory; Fight Looms in Conference.

$480,000,000 Added To Treasury Funds

House Act Radically Changed; Surtaxes Boost Totals.

By Frankiyn Waltman, Jr.

Ending two weeks of turbulent debate, the Senate early last night by a vote of 53 to 7 approved the 1934 revenue bill containing provisions which, it is estimated, will in a full year add about $480,000,000 to Treasury receipts.

Passed some weeks ago by the House, the measure was radically rewritten in many sections by the Senate and now must go to conference in order that differences between the two bodies may be reconciled, which it is believed will not be an easy task.

Senate passage of the bill was preceded by two sharp fights over proposals to make all income-tax returns public records and to tax income from Government securities, which are now exempt from taxation. The first proposal was approved by a vote of 41 to 34. The latter proposition was rejected.

Second Major Victory.

Adoption by the Senate of the amendment for full publicity for income-tax returns marked the second major victory for Senator La Follette (Republican), Wisconsin, in connection with the tax bill and the fourth for the progressive group of which he is a leader.

After fighting for many years to write into Federal income tax law provisions for heavy income and estate taxes, publicity of returns and rigid restrictions on corporations, which his progressive father placed in the tax laws of Wisconsin, "Young Bob" succeeded in getting Senate approval for a sharp boost in Federal estate taxes, as well as publicity for all returns.

He also fought shoulder-to-shoulder with Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, to outlaw consolidated returns by corporations, a victory on Thursday, which yesterday was confirmed by a vote of 58 to 19 when a motion was made to reconsider the previous action.

Although La Follette lost his fight for drastic increases in normal and surtax income rates, he fought for

Labor, "Trust" Policy Drafted

NRA Stand Is Set Forth in Statement Drawn Up by Richberg.

An important declaration of policy on the Administration attitude toward monopolies and labor in connection with the National recovery act has been drafted by Donald Richberg, general counsel of the NRA, the Associated Press reported last night.

It is understood to have the approval of Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, industrial administrator, and to have been discussed informally by the two with President Roosevelt in their conference Thursday.

It is the apparent feeling of the recovery chieftain that the time has come for a stand on these two constantly recurring problems.

The views of the President on the principles enunciated by his recovery lieutenant are not known.

It is understood the policy provides for a new deal in the anti-trust law, with a more liberal attitude, but with strict Government supervision to prevent harmful monopolies. The labor provisions are undisclosed, but they are reported to call for an assumption of responsibility by labor in its relations both with the Government and with industry.

NRA Bans Cut Rate Sales On Books to Aid Small Shops

The small booksellers, who had the support of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, won their fight yesterday to ban drug and department stores from selling books below cost as "loss leaders," in order to attract customers.

It was announced that the National Recovery Administration had approved a provision in the code, which was sought by the American Booksellers Association. The provision would make it illegal to sell a book at a price lower than that fixed by the publisher, during the first six months after the date of publication. In the event the book is published before next July, it cannot be sold below the publisher's resale price until January 1, 1935, or after the Christmas season.

Administrator Johnson, in his letter to President Roosevelt announcing approval of the code, pointed out that price cutting "has definitely oppressed small booksellers, depending solely upon the sale of books for existence."

The code will not affect the distribution of books by book clubs, or those published exclusively for mail-order and subscription booksellers. It was indorsed by the Consumers Advisory Board.

Harriet Anderson, Channel Book Shop, read the written views of Mrs. Roosevelt in behalf of small book dealers at the February NRA protest meetings.

"It has been brought to my attention," the First Lady reported, "that the retail department stores can sell books below what the small book shops can and still live up to the retail code, which says they must not sell below cost."

Mrs. Roosevelt stressed the value of the neighborhood store as opposed to a chain store and declared book shops were an intangible cultural influence.

'Coops' Banned From Chicago Pit, Quiz Told

Grain Exchange Defends Speculative Sales, Opposes Control.

(Associated Press.)

The accusation that the Chicago Board of Trade and other commodity exchanges "have studied up methods" to keep cooperatives from membership was made yesterday at a hearing on the commodity exchange regulation measure which revealed strong opposition to enactment of the bill.

Chairman Jones of the House Agriculture Committee told Howard Ellis, general counsel for the Chicago exchange, the grain marts had tried to bar cooperatives, and Ellis promptly replied that the committee head has been "misinformed."

Ellis said the courts had decided the exchange was within its rights in denying clearing house privileges to the Farmers National Grain Corporation, one of the country's largest cooperatives.

The exchange counsel said the Grain Corporation's operations were principally with nonexchange members and that was ground for the ban.

Opposes U. S. Control.

Ellis opposed the proposed measure before the Agriculture Committee which would put grain and other commodity exchanges, save cotton, under strict Federal regulation. He also submitted a statement by Arthur F. Lindley, president of the board's clearing corporation, which said passage of the bill would do more harm than good.

Although Jones has said his committee probably will report the exchange bill favorably, enactment at this session was regarded as doubtful unless the President urges such action.

During the hearing yesterday Jones was called upon to solicit Secretary Wallace's personal views.

Representative Chase (Republican), Minnesota, told the chairman he thought the actual views of the Agriculture Secretary should be heard so the committee would know whether it was an Administration bill.

Jones said he thought Dr. J. W. Duvel, head of the Grain Futures Corporation, was perhaps the better person to call, but promised he would extend to Wallace the opportunity to appear or send some one to represent him.

Duvel will be heard after the conclusion of opposing testimony on Monday, anyway, however, to explain the grain futures Administration's position in the case of Arthur W. Cutten, Chicago trader charged by Secretary Wallace with violating the grain futures law.

Hoose Defends Speculation.

Defending speculation which the bill would seek to curb, Fred C. Hoose, president of the Kansas City Board of Trade, insisted that if his market was to retain its position as the largest spot cash grain market in the Southwestern grain belt, an open and liquid futures market must be maintained.

Speaking also for the Kansas City Chamber of Commerce and for elevator interests, Hoose said "our membership feels that the proposed legislation will work a great hardship on our market by causing a narrow, restricted futures trade which would not be able to absorb the selling of cash grain."

Air Corps Bid Tangle Studied

Woodring in Committee Hearing on Threatened Loss of Funds.

The Rogers House Military Affairs Committee conferred yesterday with Harry H. Woodring, Assistant Secretary of War, in an effort to relieve the impasse which threatens to prevent expenditure of $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 available for the Army Air Corps, the Associated Press reported.

Unless the available money is contracted for before June 30, it automatically will be returned to the Treasury.

The committee has objected to the department's method of making purchases, holding it was noncompetitive. But when Woodring recently ordered that competitive bids be sought, the Army's Judge Advocate General ruled there was no competition involved.

The committee, therefore, called Woodring to see what could be done to assure fair competitive bids.

British Guns Salute Body of McDowell

District Officials Blame Congress for Lack of Facilities.

By Felix Bruner.

Vocational education during the last few years has taken on increasing importance in Washington, as elsewhere. Virtual abolition of child labor, increases in the legal school age, increasing difficulties of young people who can be legally employed in finding employment, and need for increasing efficiency in order to obtain employment, all have added to the problem.

Yet the vocational schools, so far as building and equipment are concerned, are the stepchildren of the local school system. This is not the fault of school officials who have long been struggling to obtain better facilities. It is partly because Congress has failed to act and partly because, perhaps, there has been no aroused public opinion.

"The New Deal has placed new responsibilities on education," said Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, discussing the vocational school situation. "The decreasing opportunity for employment of young people when they reach the age of 20 or 21 requires that they must be better prepared.

Work Opportunities Fewer.

"Child labor has been virtually eliminated. Young people are not going to find many opportunities to work. What is society going to do with them? They have got to be taken care of. Are we going to put them in schools, are we going to continue Civilian Conservation Corps camps, or are we going to make them candidates for the penitentiaries?

"Young people who would otherwise go to work but who are prohibited by law from working or who can not find employment, constitute a great social problem."

Mrs. Joseph N. Saunders, head of the District Parent-Teacher Associations, echoes Dr. Ballou's opinions. She believes that vocational education is just as necessary as academic education. She and her organization are insisting that vocational teachers be given the rating of junior high school instructors. They now rate as elementary school teachers.

Washington's vocational schools have a total enrollment of 1,435 students. They have a capacity of 1,700. Thus, unlike the junior and senior high schools, they are not overcrowded. Their facilities, however, are far from being up to standard.

"The difficulties, however," Dr. Ballou says, "do not grow out of excess enrollments in the various schools. The difficulties arise out of the general conditions surrounding most of these institutions."

Recommendations Ignored.

In 1929, the Board of Education appointed a committee of representative citizens to consider and report on the needs of the vocational schools. One of the recommendations of the committee provided for raising the status of the vocational schools from the elementary level to the junior high school level.

School officials and the Board of Education approved the recommendation. A bill was introduced into Congress making provision for this change. It passed the House, but was allowed to die in the Senate. Another attempt is now being made to bring about this legislation.

The Abbot Vocational School for Boys was originally organized in the old Abbot Elementary School, Fifth street and New York avenue. When the old Central High School Building was abandoned for other school purposes, this vocational school was moved into that structure.

"While the old Central High School Building has a capacity for accommodating a considerable number of pupils in excess of the present enrollment, the building is not desirably located," a report by Dr. Ballou says. "It was constructed for general academic classwork and is not well adapted to the requirements of a vocational school. In due time the Abbot Vocational School should have a new building suitably located and reasonably accessible to the center of the vocational school population to be served. It now draws boys from all parts of the city."

One of the city's outstanding vocational schools, but also one which is housed in a building unsuited to its needs is the Dennison Vocational School for Girls, occupying the old Dennison Elementary School Building on S street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets northwest. The Parent-Teacher Associations have been particularly anxious to have this building replaced by a really practical structure.

This school has an enrollment of 195 girls. Dr. Ballou believes this enrollment could and should be substantially increased if the school were more centrally located.

"The school officials," Dr. Ballou said, "believe that a new building for the Dennison Vocational School is one of the most urgent needs of the public school system."

Scarcity in Jobs Places Premium on Study of Vocations.

Some idea of the practical nature of the work at this school can be obtained from the subjects taught. These include personal hygiene and training, cafeteria and tearoom training, trade sewing, artcraft, laundry training, homemaking, child care, junior nursing, first aid, dramatics, prevocational classes and related academic subjects.

Another vocational school for boys, the Lenox School, also is located in an abandoned elementary school building. It is on Fifth street, between G street and Virginia avenue southeast. This is one section of the city, in the opinion of school officials, that is particularly in need of a vocational school. Many years ago a site was purchased for a vocational school on Potomac avenue, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets southeast, not far from the navy yard. The building has not been erected.

Two vocational schools for colored pupils, the Phelps Vocational School for Boys and the Margaret Murray Washington Vocational School for Girls, are better situated. The Phelps school, however, is to have a new building that will be ready at the beginning of the next school year. It is situated on a large site at Benning road and Twenty-fourth street northeast. This school was designed for vocational work.

The Washington school also was designed for vocational purposes. An addition was built to it in 1928. It now has an enrollment of 393 girls.

Vocational school growth has more than kept pace with the growth of the enrollment in other schools. In 1929 there was an enrollment of 903 in these schools, compared with the present enrollment of 1,435. This number is expected to grow considerably during the next few years.

The two principal needs, therefore, are for a new building for the Lenox school and one for the Dennison school. Land is available for both these schools. It is estimated that adequate buildings would cost a total of $630,000. The Abbot school should also be replaced in the not too distant future.

The next article will discuss character building in the schools and adult education.

Luck or Good Publicity?

Administration Critics Fare Poorly; Vituperation Heaped Upon Wirt, Disproven, but Not Retracted, Is Apt Example.

By Raymond Clapper.

The long casualty list of Administration critics is longer now.

President Roosevelt added to it yesterday by his bantering greeting to Senators and Representatives who trudged to Union Station to cheer their way back into Presidential grace after having spent the last three weeks in voting and maneuvering against White House policies.

After being told they had gone from "Wirt to Wirt" they shuffled back up the Hill again, looking a little sheepish.

Still, they fared less worse than most of those who have crossed the Administration path of late. Whether by coincidence or by skillful publicity, something has happened to almost every person who has stuck his neck out in recent months.

Colonel Lindbergh First to Be Struck.

Col. Lindberg's protest over annulment of air-mail contracts was answered by an intimation that he had not only violated the custom by giving out a telegram before it was received by the President, but that he had permitted himself to be used as a tool for aviation interests.

A short time before, when it was anticipated that he would be one of the witnesses for aviation companies, data was made available here from Congressional sources, indicating that his holdings and profits in aviation were far larger than the colonel says they actually were.

After working at terrific pace for several months as Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Dean Acheson was dismissed abruptly as a nice young man who lacked experience—when he opposed the Administration money policy.

Soon after a certain Senator opposed the Administration banking bill a year ago, rumors began to filter around Washington that his income tax returns were being investigated.

After Dr. Wirt finished his Brain Trust testimony before the special House committee, Representative Bulwinkle took the floor and in the shelter of Congressional immunity suggested that the Gary educator had been locked up in jail for pro-Germanism during the war.

Although a number of responsible citizens in Gary have come to his defense with straight-out denials of this assertion, Representative Bulwinkle has not retracted his reflection on Dr. Wirt. Under his Constitutional immunity nothing can be done about it.

Mr. Ickes Also Helps In Slapping Dr. Wirt.

Secretary of Interior Ickes also leaped upon the hapless schoolmaster by asserting that he had sought Public Works money, a statement which Dr. Wirt denied, with details which indicated that the Cabinet officer had confused the facts and put Dr. Wirt in an unfair light and made him eligible for martyrdom in spite of the collapse of his "brain trust" plot charges.

Veterans in Washington have seen critics in previous Administrations baldly framed. One Senator who had been attacking a certain Cabinet officer was hauled into court on charges which collapsed when they got to the jury. A Representative, in the midst of an attack on a Cabinet officer, suddenly found himself silenced by being made the victim of a badger game staged by persons who wished to shut him up.

Nothing like that has occurred in this Administration. Its technique is more adroit, or else it is favored by circumstances to an exceptional degree.

This luck, or skill, or whatever it is, also goes to news developments which have broken with a strange timeliness.

Just as Gov. Lehman of New York was battling over the power issue, the Federal Trade Commission uncovered letters several years old exposing a State senator of New York in the process of killing off bills at the orders of utilities.

Cutten Prosecution Being Investigated.

The House Agriculture Committee is investigating charges that the prosecution of Arthur W. Cutten, Chicago grain speculator, is timed to discredit opposition to the pending commodity exchange control bill.

In the midst of the Wirt excitement, the Department of Justice made known it would proceed with an old antitrust case against James Rand, jr., who had sponsored the Wirt charges and brought them to the attention of the House committee.

And it was just on the eve of the income tax payment day that the Department of Justice announced its intention to prosecute Andrew W. Mellon, and several others on income tax charges.

From all of which many here are beginning to believe that bad luck dogs the footsteps of what the Administration calls destructive critics.

U. S. Gauges Thirst For Blended Whisky

Less Than Half of Licenses to Rectify in Use.

How much blended liquor the public could use became a matter for study by the Federal Alcohol Control Administration yesterday with less than half the holders of rectifying permits reported actually in production, the Associated Press said.

Of 326 permits issued up to February 28 for rectifying distilled spirits, only 137 are being used. Since that date, the number of permits has grown to 425.

The Administration intends to take no action on applications for permits after May 1 until it has had opportunity to determine the amount of blended products which can be absorbed.

Van Sweringen, Nutt Indicted In Bank Fraud

Third Charged With Bond Transfer to "Dress" Statement.

the statement was due—September 19, 1931.

O. P. Van Sweringen was in New York at the time, conferring with Morgan officials. In a statement made to County Prosecutor Frank C. Cullitan, Van Sweringen said that he was called into another room in the Morgan Building and there found Nutt, who asked if the Van Sweringen Corporation could sell some $10,000,000 in Government bonds to the bank to help it over a tight place.

Papers Signed Then.

The papers were signed on that date, and called for sale to the Union Trust of $10,000,000 in bonds, together with $112,050 in accrued interest, which the brothers had on deposit with the Morgan company under an indenture agreement, the railroad magnate told Cullitan.

On the same day, the bank's statement was released in Cleveland purporting to show that the bank owned the bonds and that the Van Sweringen deposit account had been credited with $10,112,050.

Under the indenture agreement, it was impossible to remove the bonds from the Morgan safe, but that did not become necessary, for on October 7, slightly more than a week later, the original transaction was exactly reversed, the bonds going back to the Van Sweringens and the deposit account being reduced by that amount.

The grand jury indictments alleged that the entire transaction was designed fraudulently to mislead depositors and stockholders as to the condition of the bank on the date of the financial statement.

Life Insurance Gains.

New York, April 13 (AP).—New life insurance production in March was 23 per cent ahead of March, 1933, and made the most favorable showing so far this year, the Association of Life Insurance presidents reported today.

R. P. Ernst, 76, Dies in Hospital At Baltimore

Former Kentucky Senator Taken Ill Two Weeks Ago on Sea Trip.

Baltimore, April 13 (AP).—Former United States Senator Richard P. Ernst, 76, of Kentucky, died early today at the Johns Hopkins Hospital where he had been a patient for two weeks.

The former Senator suffered a stroke aboard the liner California, en route from Colon, Panama, and was rushed here after the boat docked in New York.

After showing improvement, Mr. Ernst became worse late Tuesday and declined steadily. He also suffered an attack of pneumonia.

At their father's bedside when he died were his son, William Ernst, of Asheville, N. C., and his daughter, Mrs. John O. Darnall, of Cincinnati, and her husband.

Defeated in 1926.

Although a Republican, Mr. Ernst was elected to the Senate in 1920 when Kentucky gave a large majority to the Democratic candidate for President, James M. Cox. He served until his defeat in 1926 by Alben W. Barkley.

Soon after taking office he was made a member of the Finance and Judiciary Committee and later became chairman of a Committee on Revison of Laws.

In his maiden speech before the Senate he caused the Little code to be killed. It was a ponderous document dealing with law revison that had been passed by the House. Mr. Ernst called attention to glaring errors in the bill. Later he and two other Senators prepared a comprehensive compilation of the laws.

Defeated for relection, Mr. Ernst returned to his law practice as head of the firm of Ernst, Cassatt & Cottle, in Cincinnati. He also served as president of the Liberty-Peoples Bank & Trust Co. in Covington, Ky.

He served as a member of the Republican National committee and was chairman of the Republican State central committee when Kentucky elected its first Republican Governor.

Centre College Graduate.

Mr. Ernst graduated from Centre College with the B. A. degree and from the University of Cincinnati Law School. He was a trustee of Centre College, the University of Kentucky, and Western College for Women at Oxford, Ohio, and was an elder and superintendent of the First Presbyterian Church at Covington. He belonged to numerous social and civic organizations in Cincinnati and Covington and was a member of the National War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A.

On Mr. Ernst's last day in the Senate Senator Thomas J. Walsh (Democrat), Montana, paid tribute to the "legal acumen and stupendous labor of the Senator from Kentucky."

Dies From Stroke.

Bank Pay-Off Plan Opposed By President

But Fight Is Pushed in Congress for Deposit Rebates.

Strong intimation that the President will support strategic moves of his Congressional leaders to sidetrack the McLeod bill to pay off closed bank deposits was given yesterday at the White House.

Somewhat facetiously the President inquired if he might hope to get back the $300 he lost in a bank in 1921, and losses sustained by members of his family in the panics of 1893 and 1907.

The President was questioned about the measure at his first press conference since returning to Washington. He jokingly inquired whether Congressmen intended to pay off all types of bad debts, recalling he lost some money in a lobster enterprise he would like to get back.

Fight in Congress.

Proponents of the bill on Capitol Hill were more serious about the matter, as the fight to provide immediate cash pay offs on closed bank deposits shifted to the House Rules Committee.

In a resolution referred to the committee, Representative Clarence J. McLeod (Republican), Michigan, asked for a special rule giving the bank "pay-off" legislation privileged status before the House.

At the same time, Representative John D. Dingell (Democrat), Michigan, began circulation of an unofficial petition pledging signers to vote against any effort to adjourn Congress before the McLeod proposals are put to a vote.

The "pay-off" forces will get into action again next week, after the resolution introduced yesterday by Representative McLeod has been on the calendar seven legislative days.

Claims Votes Needed.

Not until this period has expired can a new discharge petition be introduced in the House, to relieve the Rules Committee from consideration of the latest McLeod resolution, and, incidentally, force a House vote on the amended McLeod bill.

Provided the Rules Committee does not act on the resolution in the meantime, another effort will be made to get 145 signatures on the new petition. The Michigan Republican claimed yesterday he can get the signatures and force a House vote at least by May 14.

Despite strategic moves Thursday by the Banking Committee in reporting the McLeod bill, broadly amended to limit closed bank deposit pay offs to $2,500, plus whatever value remaining assets will bring, Representative McLeod and his followers yesterday went right ahead with their original petition to discharge the Banking Committee.

Vote in Doubt.

The required 145 signatures were completed shortly after the House adjourned at noon, Representative William I. Sirovich (Democrat), New York, being the last to sign. Representative McLeod himself refused to give up hope for the petition. He said he will ask for a ruling on whether a petition can be set aside automatically when a committee reports the bill involved, particularly when the measure is amended. He said the point never has been ruled on.

In the normal course of things, signing of 145 names by yesterday would have forced a House vote on the original McLeod bill for full bank deposit pay offs, on April 23.

Democratic leaders again declined to say whether they voluntarily will permit a vote on the amended bill reported by the Banking Committee Thursday.

Wilmot to Fight Assault Charge

Police Lieutenant Granted Jury Trial April 30.

Lieut. Alfred Wilmot, of the Capitol police force, pleaded not guilty to a charge of assault, the second in three weeks, when arraigned before Judge Ralph Given in Police Court yesterday. The officers asked for a jury trial, which was set for April 30, and was released under bond of $300.

George Smith, of 119 C street northeast, was the complainant at whose behest United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett issued the warrant on which Wilmot was arrested last Thursday. Two weeks ago he was exonerated of an assault charge brought by Mrs. Elsie Jardine, Smith's mother.

Both cases grew out of an altercation on the morning of March 19, when Wilmot is alleged to have attacked the woman and her son.

Police Criticized By Colored Group

Methods Used Against Race Are Condemned.

A committee representing colored churches, civic groups and the International Labor Defense yesterday complained to the District Commissioners against the alleged "high-handed and unnecessarily rough" methods of police with the colored population of Washington.

Specific charges were made against two policemen by the group. They were advised by the commissioners to reduce their complaints to written form and submit them for the board's consideration.

The group charged that police entered homes of colored persons without any legal right, and that police officers were too ready to use pistols in arresting colored persons.

Congress Marches to Greet President

Unable to resist the blare of the Marine Band, nearly 200 Congressmen yesterday got into step and marched from the Capitol to Union Station to greet President Roosevelt upon his return to Washington. All but five were Democrats. Lusty cheers were raised as the President stepped from his train.

Roosevelt Aid Found Debtor Of Racketeer

Secretary at Albany Denies Knowing Rum Ring Activities.

New York, April 13 (AP).—Promissory notes for $6,500 signed by Guernsey T. Cross, lawyer, secretary to President Roosevelt when the latter was Governor of New York State, are listed as part of the $200,000 estate of Max Greenberg, known as the brain of the "Waxey" Gordon liquor ring.

Listed as a claim against the estate of Greenberg, who was shot down in a hotel at Elizabeth, N. J., April 12, 1933, was a bill for $5,000 from another New York attorney, A. M. Frumberg, for getting Greenberg's fingerprints removed from St. Louis police records.

In an affidavit Mrs. Ida S. Greenberg, the widow, explained that only $200 of the series of loans to Cross had been repaid. She placed a value of $500 on the debt, but it was assessed at its full value.

Cross Denies Knowing Greenberg's Rackets

Guernsey T. Cross, a Reconstruction Finance Corporation attorney, told reporters here yesterday, according to the Associated Press, that he had borrowed money from Max Greenberg, but had never seen him and did not know who he was until after his death.

Cross explained that in 1931 Dr. Augustus Meyers, of Callicoon, N. Y., had arranged a loan of $7,000 for him. Cross said he told Myers he would repay it from his salary at $250 a month as secretary to Gov. Roosevelt.

"I asked Dr. Myers who his friend was who would make a loan to me," Cross said. "The doctor said he was a Mr. Greenberg who owned the Picadilly Hotel in New York.

"I just supposed he was a hotel owner in New York and did not know until after Greenberg was shot and killed that he was in the alcohol racket."

Cross said he had paid a number of the notes and that the balance due the Greenberg estate is now around $5,800. He said all payments had been made through a firm of lawyers.

Milwaukee Loses Plea For Patent Rehearing

Chicago, April 13 (AP).—The United States Circuit Court of Appeals today denied the City of Milwaukee a rehearing of the patent infringement suit brought against the municipality by Activated Sludge, Inc.

Nearly a hundred other American cities, counties and sewage districts have built sewage plants similar to the one at Milwaukee and will be subject to claims for damages if Milwaukee loses its appeal to the Supreme Court.

'I'm a Tough Guy,' Roosevelt Tells Hill, Then Buckles Down

White House into its customary bustle. He called conferences with Senate and House leaders for today and tomorrow. Out of them will come some decision on issues developing in his two weeks' absence.

Five Republicans—Count 'Em.

Congressmen got up early to meet the Presidential Special, assembling at the Capitol before ambling the few blocks to the station. They were mostly Democrats, headed by the Vice President and the Speaker of the House and the scarlet-coated Marine Band. At least five Republicans were counted in their midst.

"I am very glad to see you all and it is mighty good of you to come down here," were the opening words of Mr. Roosevelt as he strode on the platform with his son James. As the delegation sent up a cheer, he continued:

"I can't be truthful and say I am glad to get back—I am awfully sorry to get back—but while I have been having a wonderful time, I gather also that both houses of Congress have been having a wonderful time, in my absence."

"Furthermore," he paused, while the crowd murmured over his bronzed appearance, "I expected on this trip to get some good publicity about the fish I was catching, but couldn't in view of the fact that here in Washington apparently you good people have been going from Wirt to Wirt."

This reference to the investigation of Dr. William Wirt's charges against the "brain trust" provoked an outburst. In similar vein, he went on:

"The newspapermen on the train have been trying to make me say that I hope that Congress would go home very soon. I wouldn't say it, because I hope you will stay here just as long as you like. For you younger members of both Houses—speaking from an experience of many years in Washington—I want to point out to you the advantages of the Washington climate in July and August. It rarely gets over 110 here, there is no humidity, and I don't mind if I stay here all summer."

"I Am a Tough Guy."

After this arch comment had brought new chuckles, Mr. Roosevelt surveyed the gathering. He was hatless, clad in a blue, double-breasted suit and tie, and many observed he appeared younger than on the day of his inauguration last year.

"Well, anyway," he continued, recalling his fishing trip, "I wish you had had the chance I had to get away for two weeks, because I did have a wonderful holiday, and I have come back with all sorts of new lessons which I learned from barracuda and sharks. I am a tough guy. So, if you will come down and see me as often as you possibly can, I will teach you some of the stunts I learned.

"It's fine to see you; many thanks, and I will see you all soon."

Only a few hours after he expressed this last sentiment, calls went out from the White House summoning some half-dozen Senate leaders to a conference at 2:30 today. Another meeting with House leaders was arranged for Sunday evening.

The Congressional parade to the station provided Washington an unusual spectacle as well as another distinction between Senators, who felt it beneath their dignity to march, and Representatives, some of whom loudly questioned this feeling. The House members trooped behind the Marine band, while the Senators walked singly or in pairs on the sidewalks.

Cannon's "Formal" Statement.

"Who the hell do they think they are?" Representative Raymond Cannon (Democrat), Wisconsin, in a formal statement that added, "Some of them should be following a plow instead of a brass band."

When the President's train arrived from Miami, where he landed Thursday morning, Mrs. Roosevelt, her daughter, Mrs. Anna Dall; her son, Elliott, and Mrs. James Roosevelt, her daughter-in-law, were first to go aboard. Cabinet members and the welcoming committees of the House and Senate followed. Laughter floated out.

The Marine Band played "Hail to the Chief," and, later, after the President appeared, broke into the campaign song, "Happy Days Are Here Again." Although arranged as a nonpartisan reception, the only Republicans noted in the group were Senators Robert M. La Follette, Wisconsin; Gerald Nye, North Dakota, and Representatives Richard J. Welch, California, and W. P. Lambertson, Kansas. A Farmer-Laborite, Magnus Johnson, of Minnesota, was also there.

Among the other marchers were Speaker Henry T. Rainey, resplendent with a flowing black tie and pink carnation; Mrs. Isabella Greenway, of Arizona; Mrs. Virginia Jenckes, Indiana, and the oldest member of the House, C. C. Dickinson, of Missouri, 85-year-old Confederate veteran, who walked with a cane. Like the Senators, the Cabinet members to greet the President either walked or rode.

Signs 27 Bills.

Back at the White House, Mr. Roosevelt almost immediately signed 27 bills, including the Johnson measure prohibiting financial transactions with foreign governments in default with their obligations to the United States. This shuts off credit to all nations who have not paid their war debts.

After Cabinet officers had filed in to make their reports, Mr. Roosevelt received the press, laughingly turning away most questions with the explanation he had not yet resumed touch with developments. He termed his speech an allegory, thus making clear he hoped Congress will complete the action in time for an early adjournment.

Mr. Roosevelt would not give his position in regard to the expanded tax bill, the liberalized stock market bill, the Wagner labor bill, nor the silver proposals, pending the Congressional conferences. But he exhibited such good spirit, joshing with correspondents as "palefaces," as to give the impression he is confident of satisfactory settlement of immediate problems now before him.

This feeling was echoed in a statement from House Majority Leader Joseph W. Byrns that the House would be ready to adjourn by May 15, and that Senate Leader Joseph W. Robinson had assured him that was the aim on the other side of the Capitol. He added that the commodity exchange bill could be sidetracked to bring about the adjournment.

Hiking Club to Tramp Hills for 13 Miles

Turner's Gap will be the starting point today for the April hike of the Potomac Appalachian Trail Club of Washington. Members first assemble at the Treasury Building this morning, traveling by bus to Turner's Gap.

The 13-mile hike follows the narrow crest of South Mountain to Weverton. Shorter walks have been arranged to Crampton Gap and from Crampton Gap to Weverton.

Steam Shovel Halted By Workers' Protest

Pittsburg, Kans., April 13 (AP).—Work on an improvement project at the municipal airport was stopped today after a delegation of men, estimated at 200, appeared and protested against use of a steam shovel in grading operations.

Harry W. Nesch, city engineer, said spokesmen for the group asserted the steam shovel was doing work which should be performed by hand.

Blue Eagle's Flight Extended; Code Eagle Tries Wings Soon

The Blue Eagle will continue to fly after April 30, by an indefinite extension of the President's Reemployment Agreement, President Roosevelt announced yesterday.

Meanwhile, NRA officials went ahead laying plans for the campaign to sell another recovery bird, the Code Eagle, to the country.

The Blue Eagle was awarded originally on August 1, 1933, to those industries not yet under permanent codes which agreed to adopt blanket wage and hour provisions of the PRA.

When the PRA expired on January 1, it was extended on the same terms, with the understanding that those who did not turn in their Blue Eagles were agreeing to comply with the blanket code. Yesterday's announcement provides for an extension on the same terms.

90 Percent Under Codes.

More than 90 per cent of eligible industry, measured by number of employes, is now under permanent codes. The most important codes yet unfinished are those for anthracite coal, shipping, communications and utilities industries. There has been considerable codification opposition among the two last named because they contend they already come under other forms of Federal or State regulation.

With its emphasis now shifting, the NRA is preparing a Nation-wide drive to hand over compliance to the code authorities, whose major weapon will be a new Code Eagle. The bird will be withheld from alleged code violators.

Incidentally, officials said it would be withheld from those not financially supporting the code authorities.

The President is expected to release the new bird in flight with a Nation-wide radio address. Then Charles F. Horner, redoubtable publicity man who led the Liberty loan drives and the first Blue Eagle campaign, will step in and turn on the calliope.

Check on Violations.

Insistent though they are on compliance, NRA officials are aware of the history of the prohibition law, with its clogging of the courts and wholesale violations.

Therefore, one of the functions of William H. Davis, chairman of the reorganized Compliance Board, will be to check on violations which recur so often as to appear unenforceable. Davis will then recommend that those provisions which are consistently violated be removed from the codes.

Another aid to compliance will come from the Federal Trade Commission, which is expected to begin ordering violators of fair practice provisions to "cease and desist."

Utility Scores Trade Board Thayer Item

(Associated Press.)

The Federal Trade Commission was charged by the Associated Gas & Electric Co. with "a cheap, political trick" in citing on its record the purchase by Associated of a power company owned by W. T. Thayer, New York State Senator, at $42,000 more than its book valuation.

Letters were introduced recently at the commission's utilities inquiry which purported to show Thayer had interested himself in legislation for Associated's benefit.

The utility company's ringing statement was issued by its counsel, W. A. Hall. It followed introduction by the commission of a table which listed Associated write-ups of $88,103,000. They were made, the record stated, by E. J. Cheney, appraiser described by the commission as controlled by Associated.

Another development yesterday was testimony that the electric power industry in 1929 gave its approval to a plan to select utility executives in every State who would further cooperation with heads of educational institutions.

Plant Purchase Cited.

The Thayer item involved the purchase of the Chasm Power Co., of Chateaugay, N. Y., in 1924, by Associated. The power concern paid $122,500 for the company which was valued on the Chasm Co.'s books at $80,500. This indicated a profit to Thayer of $42,000—more than 50 per cent.

The commission did not state that the Chasm Co. was owned by Thayer, but previous records had shown this and it was confirmed in the Associated statement.

The commission said it cited the company as an example of write-ups or increases in book valuation, both before and after purchases of companies.

"The use of the Chasm Power Co. as an example," Associated said in its statement, "can only be characterized as a cheap political trick and is obviously playing to the gallery.

"Chasm Power Co. was acquired from W. T. Thayer by Associated interest in 1924. The $42,000 alleged profit was purely a financial transaction with no political significance, nor should their be any inference that the profit was unjustified."

Education Link Seen.

The evidence that utilities planned closer relations with educational institutions was taken from the minutes of the National Electric Light Association, since dissolved and replaced by the Edison Electric Institute. The record showed the utility members of a committee for cooperation with educational establishments obtained approval of the public relations committee for the program.

There was, however, nothing to show that the industry ever took the steps outlined by the committee.

Publicity Is Voted For Income Taxes

adoption of the proposal of the Senate's wealthiest man, James Couzens (Republican), Michigan, to require each Federal income taxpayer next year to add 10 per cent to his payment, computed on the basis of other rates in the bill.

Known as the "recovery tax," it applies to all in the same proportion.

In tax matters, Couzens is always found with the progressives and thus in this respect his victory also was their victory. Seldom has the progressive group in the Senate exerted as much influence in the writing of a tax bill as they did this year.

Originally designed to make changes in the administrative features of the income tax law in order to plug loopholes through which wealthy men were legally avoiding tax payments, as shown by recent Seate hearings, the measure when it passed the House contained provisions estimated to yield about $258,000,000 in a full year.

Progressives Force Boost.

The fact that its provisions are now estimated to produce $480,000,000 in revenue is due almost wholly to the activities of the militant Senate Progressives, fighting against the leaders of both the Democratic and Republican parties. Even changes which they did not sponsor were offered by the Administration leaders in the hope of heading off the Progressive proposals.

Whether all of these changes will survive the conference between House and Senate is doubtful. The House Democratic leaders already have expressed opposition to the increased estate taxes and to the Couzens "recovery" tax. Like the Senate leaders, they also are opposed to the publicity amendment. But it remains to be seen whether they can be any more successful than the Senate leaders in holding in line the rank and file of their following.

Estimates of annual revenue yields from provisions of the tax bill, as computed by Congressional experts, are:

Tax of 1-10 of 1 per cent on capital stock of corporations and excess profits tax	$95,000,000
Increase in estate taxes to maximum rate of 60 per cent	92,000,000
Corresponding increases in gift tax rates	4,000,000
Changes in income tax structure	27,000,000
Couzens 10 per cent tax on income payments	55,000,000
Administration of depreciation allowances (not in bill but promised by Treasury as result of legislation)	85,000,000
Changes in capital gains and losses provisions	30,000,000
Penalty surtaxes on personal holding companies	20,000,000

Administration Silver Policy Hit in House

Rainey Denounces Gold Bloc, Demands Foes' Objectives.

pay-offs, effectively checkmated for the time being by Democratic leaders.

Democratic proponents of both measures, however, chafed under the Administration bit, foreboding more trouble for the White House before adjournment, and, incidentally, before fall elections.

Yesterday's flare-up among House advocates of silver monetization was provided by moves to curb the far-reaching silver-purchase bill reported by the Senate Agriculture Committee and a new Treasury check on silver holdings.

Rainey Forecasts Passage.

Returning from the Congressional reception to the President at Union Station, Speaker Rainey predicted "silver will go through this session," then proceeded to draft his statement answering Treasury intimations of a "silver lobby."

Earlier, Representative Fiesinger disclosed 101 members have signed an informal petition he is circulating, calling on the Rules Committee to give favored consideration to his bill for purchase of 1,500,000,000 ounces of silver in an effort to restore 1926 commodity prices.

"It is time to investigate the investigators," said Speaker Rainey, referring to the silver holdings inquiry now under way. "Somewhere there is a gold bloc, intent on preventing a broadening of our metallic base by including silver.

"Who are they? What are their methods? Why is the present fight against silver being carried on?"

Speaker Rainey, on one previous occasion, answered Secretary Morgenthau's charge that some advocates of silver are "not disinterested" by deliberately paving the way for House passage of the Dies bill, permitting foreign silver payments for American agricultural surpluses.

The Speaker, emboldened, if anything, by his recent Illinois primary victory, was in a similar mood yesterday, as he commented on reports "that a further survey 'concerning the silver positions' is to be made."

"I hope it will be made, and I hope it will be thorough," he said. "It will undoubtedly disclose the names of customers who bought silver and delivery months, whether they are long or short, and will disclose information with reference to 'spot silver positions,' but I am wondering what significance all this will have.

"We are trying to raise the price of wheat by curtailing acreage and resorting to other methods, and we are going to do it. I am wondering what the reaction would be if the Secretary of Agriculture should start an investigation as to wheat holdings, names and addresses of customers, number of lots or contracts, what amount of wheat is in the warehouses, who owns it, &c.

Seeks Unity on Bill.

"Such an investigation would probably disclose that wheat is out of the hands of the farmers, and these disclosures might possibly interfere with the attempt to get a better price for wheat on the farms."

Suggesting various silver groups in the House and Senate unite on one silver bill, he said he will do all he can to get such a bill "the consideration it deserves on the floor of the House at this session."

"Recognize the metal which half the world demands, including that section of the world where we must find new markets; reestablish trade with the Orient, with South America, and with all silver-using countries, and tariff walls will vanish," his statement read. "The prices of 1926 can quickly be restored."

In the Senate there was a mild repercussion from renewed Treasury activities in scouting out silver holdings.

Senator Arthur Robinson (Republican), Indiana, asked whether Secretary Morgenthau made any response to the Senate resolution requesting Treasury data on silver speculation and holders of silver. He said he could not understand why no reply had been made.

Pecora Seeks Silver Data.

Senator James Couzens (Republican), Michigan, formally announced that Banking Committee Counsel Pecora had called on stock exchange firms for detailed data respecting silver trading and silver holdings.

In the House, the silver issue has been projected into the Goldsborough bill setting up a permanent board to administer Federal money policies. Representative James G. Scrugham (Democrat), Nevada, has attached an amendment to the bill providing a silver-purchase plan approximating Representative Fiesinger's.

Scrugham predicted last night the House Banking Committee will report out the amended bill when it meets next Tuesday.

N. C. Governor Asks Tobacco Parley Here

the big office first. They looked around and realized there were no guns or bullet-proof vests there, so they told me to get the key to the little room opening off the office. I tried to stall by saying I didn't know where the key was kept, but that didn't do any good.

"While we were there, Dillinger said:

"'Let's take the old boy along with us so he won't squawk too soon.'

"Van Meter said, 'O. K.'

"That made me mad.

"I eased out, backwards, slow. Then I slammed the door to the room, but I couldn't find the key for it. I guess Dillinger had it. If I could have got it locked, I'd have had that guy just like that!"

Pittinger snapped his fingers resoundingly.

Car Speeds Away.

"I ran about ten feet down the hall to the head of the stairs. I slipped and fell down and hurt my knee. But I made it down the stairs and ran down an alley. When I came to the corner of the alley, I saw their car tearing away from Town Hall."

Pittinger told his story in his home while the search was in full cry. The officer's leg, according to his doctor, was badly wrenched when he fell and he will have to remain here for several days.

Pittinger, through his narrative, did not appear to have been unnerved by his encounter with "Public Enemy No. 1." He laughed and joked as he talked, but seemed disappointed that he had been unable to bag the Nation's most desperate criminal single-handed.

The famous actor, reported recently to have effected a reconciliation with Mary Pickford, his estranged wife, refused to be seen, while castle authorities declined to affirm or deny that Lady Ashley was there.

Pollard Calls Jefferson First "New Dealer"

Virginia Society Holds Ball on Anniversary of Birthday.

Thomas Jefferson was the first of the New Dealers and risked his political life in behalf of the forgotten man, John Garland Pollard, former Governor of Virginia, last night told the Virginia State Society.

Yesterday was the 191st anniversary of the birth of the third President, and the society observed the event with a ball at the Willard Hotel, preceded by a meeting at which Pollard gave the principal address. The former Governor is now chairman of the Board of Veterans' Appeals in the Veterans' Administration.

Among the unpopular causes which Jefferson championed, Pollard said, was the establishment of a public free school system. He added:

"The opposition to this, his pet measure, continued throughout his life, and he never lived to see the day when the public school system was generally adopted throughout his beloved State."

Headed Schools Here.

The speaker pointed out that Washington's first public school was established while Jefferson was President, and he was elected president of the first Washington City Public School Board.

"He contributed out of his own personal funds $200 to the support of the school," Pollard said. "The first school building was located at the southwest corner of Seventeenth and I streets northwest and is described as a wooden structure 50 feet long, 20 feet wide and one story high.

"The salary of the first schoolmaster was $500 per annum, but he was required to pay out of this sum for fuel consumed and all other expenses incident to a school and for such assistant teachers as might be necessary."

Jefferson first came out for the "forgotten man" as a 26-year-old member of Virginia's colonial Legislature, Pollard said, when he proposed a bill allowing emancipation of slaves. Next he sought to end the law of primogeniture, under which the oldest son inherited all his father's possessions.

Founder of University.

Among other unpopular fights which the Virginia patriot undertook were foundation of the University of Virginia, considered a radical step, and the separation of church and state. Jefferson described the latter as his bitterest battle, Pollard said, one in which practically all the wealth and influence of his State was arrayed against him.

Thus Jefferson led in the New Deal," said Pollard. "Thus he fought battle after battle in behalf of the forgotten man. He was a champion of righteous but unpopular causes, which in the end triumphed because they were based on eternal truth."

DoubleBarrage Hitting Ritchie Stirs Maryland

Foes Take Stump in West, Papers on Eastern Shore Attack.

By J. E. Hager.

Hagerstown, Md., April 13.—Political leaders were watching the reaction to attacks upon two fronts on the Ritchie administration this week.

While anti-Ritchie forces in western Maryland under the banner of Dr. Charles H. Conley, of Frederick, avowed candidate for Governor, were attacking the record of the Governor, two Democratic newspapers on the Eastern Shore came out in opposition to a fifth term for Ritchie.

William P. Hall, Baltimore attorney, who is supporting Conley for the nomination, likened Ritchie to a modern Julius Caesar, ready for political burial, in an address before the Conley Club of Washington County, at a banquet here.

Hall quoted from the Maryland Declaration of Rights, "A long continuation in executive power is dangerous to liberty; rotation in office is the best security to permanent freedom."

Maryland P. S. C. Hit.

Dr. Conley said that the Public Service Commission of Maryland has failed signally to measure up to the purposes and objects it was formed to promote, having failed to represent the citizens of Maryland and prevent encroachments and abuses which he declared large public utilities always bring when unregulated and improperly supervised.

Daniel S. Sullivan, president of the Conley for Governor Club of Baltimore, said that many Baltimore districts would give the Frederick physician strong support in the primaries.

While western Maryland anti-Ritchie leaders were active in the interest of the nomination of Dr. Conley, the Cambridge Banner and the Salisbury Times, both Democratic, went on record as opposing a fifth term for the Governor.

There is a feeling among many voters that it is time for Ritchie to relinquish his position and give some of the other distinguished citizens an opportunity to serve, the Banner's editorial stated. The Banner did not criticize the Governor, but instead stated that during his tenure in office he had made an unusually efficient public servant.

Ritchie Senate Race Talked.

Meanwhile, it is known that pressure of leaders, known to be in the Ritchie organization, is being brought to bear upon the Governor to become a candidate for the United States Senate.

Last week it was whispered that Ritchie was ready to make such an announcement, but there was a last-minute hitch, which has led to reports from Baltimore that a break between the Governor and Senator Millard Tydings is probable. This rumor had Tydings combining his organization with that of Mayor Howard Jackson of Baltimore, who has long been mentioned as the Democratic nominee for Governor.

Friends of both the Governor and Tydings, however, discount this rumor, pointing to the long personal friendship between the two. They expect Ritchie and Tydings to get together next week, and a decision is then expected as to what course the former will take. Democratic leaders admit that Ritchie will have no opposition for the Senate nomination. These leaders feel that the Governor would long since have announced that he would not be a candidate to succeed himself, but has hesitated to withdraw while his administration is under fire from the anti-administration camp.

They feel, however, that he will eventually decide to step aside for the good of the party and upon the advice of many of his closest friends, despite the fact that many influential Democrats in Baltimore City have urged that he run again for Governor.

Part of Social Science in NRA Plan Discussed

Virginia Official Declines Opinion on Extent of Recovery.

Charlottesville, Va., April 13 (Spl.).—The part the social sciences are playing in National recovery was discussed at this afternoon's sessions of the eighth annual meeting of the Virginia Social Science Association before sections on economics, history, political science, law, geography and sociology.

Indications of recovery in Virginia labor and commerce were given before the economics section by R. H. Barker, of the State department of labor and industry. He declined to answer the question as to whether the upturn is fundamental or largely temporary due to stimulation of business through operation of relief agencies. Prof. Duncan Clark Hyde, of the University of Virginia, presided as chairman of the economics section. The discussion was led by Frank P. Evans, statistician of the Industrial Commission of Virginia, and Hugh S. Mead, of the University of Richmond.

Clarence A. Newman, of the Virginia State Chamber of Commerce, was chairman of the geography section, and the first speaker was Jay Winston Johns, of Ash Lawn, Albemarle County, who spoke on the relation of the public works program to the recovery program in Virginia.

Vance, of Carolina, Speaks.

"Regional Planning and the Recovery Program in the South" was the subject of a paper by Prof. Rupert B. Vance, of the University of North Carolina. The report of the Virginia committee for the advancement of geographic education was submitted by Raus M. Hanson, of the Harrisonburg State Teachers College.

Prof. R. C. McDaniel, of the University of Richmond, presided over the history section institute, at which some problems of the colored person in the depression were related by Caroline Sparrow, of Sweet Briar College.

How the new National land policy relates to Virginia was discussed before sociologists by James E. Ward, of the University of Virginia. He stated that "the countryside has always been the nursery of the Nation, and the law of preservation demands that we preserve the rural pattern in our society as much as possible.

J. Paul Leonard, of William and Mary, told the same section that Virginia can take pride in the fact that this State is leading others in the educational movement that "will orient youth and prepare them to achieve their desires through rational social planning."

Utilities Concept "Must Change."

If the "New Deal" is here to stay, current concepts regarding public utilities must radically change, D. W. Woodbridge, of William and Mary, told the legal section, which was presided over by Prof. Theodore S. Cox, of William and Mary.

The effects of the National recovery program upon the functions of county government in Virginia were pointed out by J. F. E. Prufer, of Roanoke College, to the section on county government.

John J. Corson 3d, of the University of Richmond, was elected president of the association, succeeding Dr. R. B. Pinchbeck, of the same institution. Other officers chosen were: Dr. A. G. Taylor, William and Mary, vice president, and Miss Frances Farmer, University of Richmond, secretary-treasurer.

Executive committee members named were: Mrs. Belle Boone Beard, Sweet Briar College; Theodore S. Cox, William and Mary; Dr. F. James Barnes, Richmond; Dr. Floyd N. House, University of Virginia, and R. T. Barker, State Department of Labor.

Joint Sociology Session Hears Dr. Pinchbeck

Needed Steps in Sustained Recovery Program Outlined.

By Lee Hawkins.

Charlottesville, Va., April 13.—At a joint meeting tonight of the Virginia Social Science Association and the Virginia Conference of Social Work Dr. Raymond B. Pinchbeck, University of Richmond, new president of the Social Science Association, speaking on "Blending the Social and Economic in a Program of Sustained Recovery," outlined certain aspects of the recovery program which he thought should be made permanent, and suggested other steps which he said should be included in the permanent plant.

He indorsed a system of fair-trade practice codes and machinery to prevent cut-throat competition and provide for the prevention of monopoly, and safeguard the interest of the consumer.

A scheme of scientifically planned unemployment insurance reserves should be established on a Nation-wide basis by Congress, the speaker said, not to pay idle employes a dole, but to create public works on which unemployed workers may be engaged.

Urges Minimum Wage.

Other provisions urged by Dr. Pinchbeck included a minimum wage for labor; a progressive shortening of the workday and workweek of labor, and the inauguration of a policy of reciprocal tariff treaties.

Dr. Cary Johnson, of the University of Virginia, this afternoon gave the history section of the social work conference an interpretation of the change in the Democratic party from Jefferson's ideal of liberalism and liberty to a policy of governmental regulation of life and industry.

Speakers before a serial work conference were Judge James Hoge Ricks, of Richmond, who discussed the relationship of recreation to delinquency, and Miss Anita Faatz, of Baltimore, director of social service, Maryland State Aid and Charities.

Relief Fund Assured.

Arthur W. James, Virginia commissioner of public welfare, told the conference that a satisfactory arrangement had been made with the Federal Relief Administration, whereby a definite sum has been allocated for emergency relief in Virginia from now until next February.

The Social Work Conference elected the following: President, R. F. Hough, Salem; vice presidents, the Rev. Thomas E. Mitchell, Richmond; Miss Dora Beck, Charlottesville, and Mrs. Bessie Lamb Woolfolk, Lynchburg; secretary treasurer, Frank Davis Preston, Richmond.

Executive committee members: Miss Georgianna Sinclair, Arthur A. Guild, James W. Phillips and J. W. Trevillian, Richmond; Mrs. Sallie Jeffries, Roanoke, and Mrs. E. M. Wainwright, Norfolk.

Haskins and a pal, John Malik, also of Detroit, held up occupants of the bank, took 1,800 in currency and fled as Cashier Hill Stump opened fire on them. A bullet fatally wounded Malik. The money was recovered.

Haskins was taken tonight to the Randolph County Jail for safekeeping.

It's a Bad Day for Moonshiner When Hounds Bay After Thief

Luray, Va., April 13 (Spl.).—Two sides of meat versus a moonshine still, and the verdict is for the still.

Mrs. Frank P. Cromer, of near Shenandoah City, reported to Page County authorities early yesterday morning that her smokehouse had been robbed during the night, the thief making off with two sides of meat.

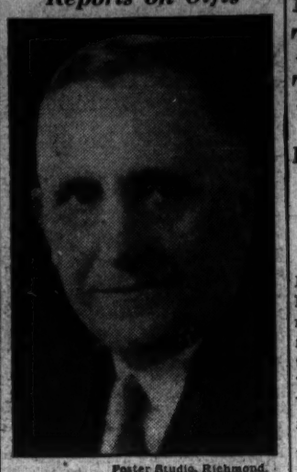
The Radford bloodhounds were called from Staunton and the owner-trainer, D. H. Radford, joined Deputy Sheriff C. S. Shaver at the Cromer house. The hounds picked up a trail and followed it for a mile and a half into the mountains.

At that point the pursuers ran upon a still in operation. They saw a man disappearing in the distance. The posse destroyed the still. About 400 gallons of mash were dumped, barrels were smashed, the fire quenched, and the still taken to the sheriff's office at Luray.

The cap and gloves of the fleeing man were found, and Radford reports that Page officers expect to make an arrest in the still case.

Further chase of the meat thief was abandoned.

Reports on Gifts



Foster Studio, Richmond.

DR. JOHN LLOYD NEWCOMB, president of the University of Virginia, who reported yesterday, Founder's Day, that $147,774 has been donated to the University since Founder's Day a year ago.

Schools Ignore Jefferson Plan, Hutchins States

Gifts of $147,774 to U. Va. Reported by Newcomb on Founder's Day.

Charlottesville, Va., April 13 (Spl.).—"Education has failed to fulfill the hopes Jefferson had for it because we have not followed him where we should have," declared Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, speaking on "The Higher Learning in America," at the Founder's Day exercises at the University of Virginia today.

Dr. John Lloyd Newcomb, president of the university, earlier had made a brief report, showing the present enrollment to be 2,380 students. Counting the summer quarter, adult education and nurses' training school, the grand total for the 12 months is 4,572.

In the regular session there are 1,345 Virginia students, 1,005 from 40 other States and 30 from 13 foreign countries. The total is 156 below the attendance last session and 224 below the enrollment in 1931-32.

Gifts Total $147,774.

Funds donated since last Founder's Day amounted to $147,774. In addition, Dr. Newcomb said, the university has been enriched by gifts of hundreds of valuable books from alumni and other interested friends.

Acknowledgment was also made of a large collection of works of art, including paintings, enamels, china, glass, silver, rugs and furniture, the gift of Paul Goodloe McIntire. They await exhibition in the Bayly-Tiffany Art Museum, under construction.

The gift of moneys reported will be used for purposes designated by the donors, with the exception of $60,000 bequeathed by Edward Dean Richmond, an alumnus of the class of 1916, which may be used for any needed purpose.

The present system of education is extensive, free, elaborate and costly, Dr. Hutchins said.

"We have everything Jefferson wanted and a great deal more, but I think no one will deny that democracy is in a worse plight today than it was before Jefferson began to labor in its behalf. We should hardly today be ready to say that education has corrected any innate obliquities in our moral organization or that because of it we had advanced beyond the condition of our indigenous neighbors, or that through it we had trained up able counselors to administer the affairs of our country."

Jefferson's Views Sound.

Dr. Hutchins declared that as to the organization, methods and scope of education, Jefferson's views were sound when they were expressed and are sound today, but the trouble is we have not adhered to them.

"The great Democrat understood very well that the same kind of education is not equally desirable for everybody. He divided the community into the laboring and the learned and provided a different type of education for each group. He knew that some adolescents ought to go to work while others were continuing their education. It would have seemed to him fantastic that all students should pursue the same course of study up to their twentieth year," the speaker said.

President Hutchins contended that the educational system should be constructed with a view to sending the ordinary individual into gainful occupations not earlier than his eighteenth or even his twentieth year. "The alternative to keeping him in school until that age is to put him in jail or enlist him in the Army or Navy. I doubt if Jefferson would favor either course. Instead he would insist on his two principles: differentiation and selection.

Have No Real University.

"Because we have misunderstood Jefferson we have not yet secured a university in the United States. And what we call universities have been made less effective than they would be if we had grasped the fact that Jefferson was not really talking about the higher learning because he was not talking about the intellectual life.

"The university is the home of the intellect; it is its natural and perhaps its only home. This means that the university should renounce any ambition to increase the ability of its graduates to acquire external goods and should relax its desire to train them in the moral virtues. Instead it should see to it that in the college or in the university itself students could first learn how to deal with ideas. This means an education in the seven liberal arts, which were the disciplines developed to teach the student how to discover, analyze and utilize ideas."

D.C. Officials Approve Rum Law Changes

Amendments Would Make Beer Sale Time Agree With Hard Drinks.

The District Commissioners yesterday approved amendments to the District liquor laws which would make the provisions of the 3.2 beer act uniform with the liquor control act in regard to sales hours.

These amendments, drafted by E. Barrett Prettyman, District corporation counsel, prohibit all "off sale" of alcoholic beverages on Sunday. They permit "on sale" of beer and light wines from 8 a. m. until midnight on Sunday.

The other provisions would prohibit all "on sale" from 2 a. m. until 8 a. m. on week days and all "off sale" from 10 p. m. until 8 a. m. on week days.

Sixty-four city liquor dealers whose required reports of sales and purchases of rum stocks have not been received by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board yesterday were cited to show why their licenses should not be revoked or suspended.

Letters were sent to each of the delinquent dealers saying that their failure to report was in violation of the liquor laws. All were asked to appear before a member of the board within five days, to show why the board should not take away their licenses.

It has been indicated by the board that drastic action against the tardy dealers will result if it can be proved their neglect to report was wilful.

How to Keep Well

Muriatic Acid.

There is need for the revival of the medicinal use of the one-time popular dilute muriatic acid. In the old days we took it because of a supposed deficiency of acid in the gastric juice. That was, however, not much more than an effort to rationalize, as the psychologists would say. We sought in that way to explain what was recognized as a fact. Many people had used dilute muriatic acid as something for a tonic and had found it helpful. Not all of this good result was due to the psychic effect of taking medicine, or to the curative powers of nature when given time. Some of it was clearly due to the medicine.

There must be a reason. The fact that the acidity of the gastric juice was due to muriatic acid, and the further fact that some analyses of gastric juice showed absence of muriatic acid offered a plausible explanation. The logic of the benefit from taking dilute muriatic acid appeared clear in the light of these facts. Further study of the gastric juice cut the foundations from under this logic.

Meanwhile, the advantages of eating foods that had an alkali ash were being developed. We learned that there were a number of disorders that made it advisable to eat fruits and vegetables and alkali ash foods. The people used bicarbonate of soda as something of a folk medicine cureall. The facts combined to make us prc.t well discontinue dilute muriatic acid as a medicine.

Now the pendulum is swinging back, as all free pendulums have a way of doing. Dilute muriatic acid as a medicine is coming back into use. There is some indication that this time better reasons for using it may be found. We know much more than we did about the balance between acids and alkalis in the body. Most people now know that our bodies never become acid; that what we may call an acid condition is no more than a decrease in alkalinity of the tissues. We know that what we call acidosis may be due to certain aromatic substances formed either abnormally or in excess in the body, or it may be due to reduction of the reserve of alkali by overeating acid ash foods.

We now recognize alkalosis as being a condition just the opposite of acidosis and capable of doing just as much harm as the better known last-named condition. We know a lot about the balance between acid and alkali in the ash of nearly every article of diet.

We are beginning to talk about the difference between the reaction of foods as eaten and as digested and their ash reaction and the effects of this difference. For instance, we may eat enough apples or drink enough lemonade to set our teeth on edge and cause a certain sour feeling. This is due to the sourness of acidity of the fruits during the process of eating, digestion and even absorption. But we know that in the end these foods are burned into an alkali ash which serves to increase the alkali reserve.

And, finally, we are learning something about osmotic pressure; how a disturbance in osmotic pressure causes dropsy on the one hand or overdrying tissues on the other; and how, in order to get alkaline urine, we must have acidity of the kidney cells.

There is reason to nope that the use of dilute muriatic acid as a medicine may be on a firmer foundation than it was.

Has Right Combination.

M. E. D. writes:

1. Will you tell us how John D. Rockefeller, with his physical handicaps, has succeeded in prolonging his life to such a healthful old age?

2. In what ways have his habits of living differed from those of the average person who kicks off at 60 or 70 years, if not sooner.

3. A summary of the statistics bearing on the ways of living of those who have reached a ripe old age would be of great interest to many persons.

Reply.

1. His father lived to a ripe old age. He is thin and considerably underweight. He has the advantage of all the care money can buy, and his habits are said to have been good all of his life. This is a somewhat exceptional combination in making for longevity.

2. It is said he eats sparingly of simple foods. His sleeping, resting and exercising habits are said to be very wisely chosen, well adapted to his strength, and, more important, they are followed persistently. It is said he does not use alcoholic beverages or tobacco.

3. I presume you mean to ask what habits have been followed by those who have reached extreme old age. Stanley Hall tried to investigate that. His book on senescence has a chapter on the subject. He wrote that interviewing old people as to their habits led him to nothing of value.

Radio Waves and Ripples

MR. ROOSEVELT said he was a "tough guy" and that he hoped all the Representatives and Senators would come over and see him so he could show them some of the stunts he learned from barracuda and sharks.

The President said that in a little speech to the boys at the Union Station yesterday.

The radio lads scarcely expected a speech. But they got one. And the most partisan observer must admit that the Nation's No. 1 broadcaster exceeded by a wide margin any previous microphone performance under comparable circumstances.

The radio lads—N. B. C.'s Carlton Smith, C. B. S.'s Bob Trout, &c.—had quite a time of it keeping excited legislators from spilling their equipment all over the place. But they managed to keep everything upright and more or less collected and were quite properly pleased with themselves.

THERE seems to be nothing in the way of appropriateness that the networks have overlooked in their plans for air observance of the 370th anniversary of Shakespeare's birth, April 23.

Columbia for the first time in history will set up microphones in Anne Hathaway's cottage. Ninety-thousand pilgrims tramp through the house and grounds annually, but radio, in the brief space of 15 minutes, can throw the scenes of the poet's courtship and early married life open to the absentee inspection of millions.

Part of the quarter-hour will be turned over to a description of some of the relics in the rich Warwickshire dialect of Mrs. Crowley, the custodian, who 20 years ago assisted the Hathaway family in moving out after a tenure of 400 years. The rest of the show, which goes on Sunday, April 22 at 12:45 p. m., will be occupied with the playing of Elizabethan music and speeches by Sir Archibald Flowers, three times mayor of Stratford and chairman of the memorial committee; Bridges Adams, director of the Memorial Theater, and S. C. Wellstood, custodian of Shakespeare's birthplace.

NATIONAL turns to the poet's American shrine—the barrelled ceilings and wide marble facades of Washington's Folger-Shakespeare Library. There on the stage of the Elizabethan theater Edith Wynne Mathison will read from Shakespeare's works, and early English choral music and songs from Shakespeare in modern settings will be sung by the Ypsilanti Singers, all under the auspices of Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, at 4:45 p. m., April 23.

At one stage of the proceedings, John Challis will play Elizabethan tunes on the harpsichord and the recorder. (The recorder is a flutelike instrument once popular in Western Europe, particularly in the seventeenth century. There are references to it in Hamlet.)

National's Radio Guild also honors Shakespeare's memory by doing "The Tempest" on the same day at 3 p. m.

Up in Kalamazoo, Mich., there lives a man by the name of William Shakespeare. We interviewed him one hot night last summer as he stopped over at the Mayflower between code hearings. He makes level-winding fishing reels, good ones. Apparently the networks never heard of him.

Bachrach Photo.

Here's the young man who will put baseball on the air for WJSV this summer. You've heard of him before. Arch McDonald's the name. He goes to work Monday.

THIS is a story which proves that even a black cat ought to be pretty careful what it does on Friday the 13th.

It also explains why WJSV Announcer Bob Trout spent most of yesterday walking up and down alleys.

Trout thought he had a black cat all lined up for his Friday the 13th broadcast until he went over to get it from its master, a downtown restaurant proprietor.

The restaurant man, it seems, keeps large electric fans. The cat, it seems, was feeling particularly playful. It started to play with one of the fans.

Splash!

Everything seems to be ready for the opening of the baseball season Monday.

Husing and McNamee will be working for the networks, but two of the local stations will take care of the situation in their own way. Bill Coyle and Bob Youse microphoning play-by-play accounts of the opening game for WRC and WJSV's sport specialist, Arch McDonald, laboring for the Columbia outlet.

National has arranged a special broadcast of baseball's officialdom for the occasion. John Heydler, president of the National League, will speak from Cincinnati; William Harridge, president of the American League, from Washington, and Graham McNamee will put Carl Hubbell, Lou Gehrig and Dolly Stark, National League umpire, on the air from New York. It all starts happening at 6 p. m.

Getting Personal . . .

Gladys Swarthout's marriage to Frank Chapman, concert barytone and son of the famous Dr. Frank Chapman, ornithologist, is one of the marvels of New York musical circles . . . they are seen everywhere together . . . walking and riding in Central Park . . . at parties and rehearsals . . . they practice together almost daily, taking turns at the piano . . . and neither makes a professional engagement without consulting the other . . . Peggy Allenby, Beauty Box Theater actress, carries on during a broadcast just as though she were on the stage with hundreds watching her . . . her expressive hands are constantly in motion . . . she clenches her fists, throws her arms wide in sweeping gestures . . . Joe Penner earned his first money catching frogs—not ducks—in the swamps of his native Hungary . . . the duck man was born in Nadgybeck Kareck and his grandfather was a high dignitary in the Hungarian Church . . . Ozzie Nelson, Harriet Hilliard and the Nelson band now own Washington and Baltimore attendance records as a result of their recent appearances . . . May 3 has been announced as the date for the first appearance of Paul Whiteman's mystery singer on the Music Hall program . . . all that Whiteman will say about his man is that he possesses a rich barytone and that his sponsor expects him to be one of the finds of the year . . . WOL's Gypsy Barytone has been taken by six stations of the G. B. S. chain as a regular thing on Friday nights . . . Ted Ostenkamp swings his Today in Sports broadcast into full-time operation on WOL beginning Monday at 6:15 p. m. . . . Ripley has heard of a tribe of people with tails living on an island north of Japan and is going out to find it . . . Mrs. Roosevelt recently returned to Columbia's studios in New York after an absence of two years, and was able to remember the names of some of the page boys.

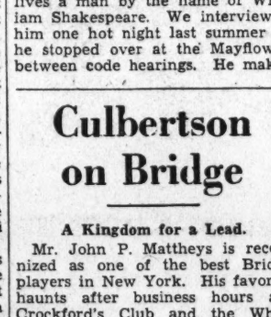
Culbertson on Bridge

A Kingdom for a Lead.

Mr. John P. Mattheys is recognized as one of the best Bridge players in New York. His favorite haunts after business hours are Crockford's Club and the Whist Club, and quite recenty he mournfully recounted a terrible experience which happened to him at the Whist Club, the source of the laws governing rubber Contract Bridge. Some of the members of this club use a system of artificial bidding to show Aces and Kings in the early stages, and gradually in the higher altitudes, if the honor strength disclosed by these bids is sufficient, perhaps reach out after Slams.

Mr. Mattheys, of course, was familiar with this system of bidding and on the dóleful occasion which I am discussing he could see the danger of a Slam being bid and made when his opponent on the left opened the bidding with one club, showing a minimum of Ace, King, Ace and another King. His partner passed, and Third Hand bid one notrump, which under this artificial system showed the other two Aces. But perhaps the hand will be understood better if I show it here:

North, Dealer
North and South vulnerable



The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1♣	Pass	1NT	2◇
6♡	Pass	7♡	Dbl.
Pass	Pass	Redbl.	Pass
Pass	Pass

The artificial nature of North and South's bidding has already been discussed. Mr. Mattheys' bid of two diamonds was designed as a defense against the seven-bid which he feared might be in the offing. When the seven hearts had been bid, Mr. Mattheys felt quite confident that his partner must open the diamond suit but decided that he would reenforce the demand by a Double. However, his partner in the East read the bid in another way. He decided that the Double indicated not ability to win a diamond trick, but a high card in some other suit or the possibility of a ruff in another suit; so he led a spade, and the contract seven, against which Mr. Mattheys thought he had erected a perfect bidding and playing defense, was made.

A Tender Declaration.

Of course nobody seriously believes that the State Department is going to make itself ridiculous by resenting James T. Marriner's reported affection for the French. This able counselor of our Paris Embassy is reported to have told a Parisian interviewer: "I love the French more than the Americans."

There are several kinds of love, as most people unwittingly learn before they have passed through all of Shakespeare's seven ages. An eminent British statesman once remarked that he loved his own country as a husband should love his wife, but loved France as some husbands love their mistresses. Britain smiled.

The French are a peculiar people. They are the only ones on this terrestrial sphere who can get away with the position taken by Abel Bonnard in his fascinating book En Chine. M. Bonnard, if memory serves, thought it odd that his fellow Frenchmen evince so slight a sympathy for modern China, since China of old was what he deemed France to be today: A civilized people in a world peopled by barbarians.

Not only Mr. Marriner loves the French; everybody loves them. They are infuriatingly logical; they are incredibly conceited; they are offensively intelligent; they are often exceedingly mercenary. But everybody loves them, even, at heart, the Germans. As a race, the French have "it."

So none need be upset by the remark attributed to Mr. Marriner, which of course does not indicate that he would not do the French in for the sake of his own country, if the necessity arose. Indeed we may even attribute to him a diplomatic guile worthy of the oldest traditions of his calling. What cards he has up his sleeve we do not know. But obviously the French will now beam upon him. And in the effulgence of their smiles he may even be able to wheedle them out of a small token debt payment. So tender a declaration should have negotiable value.

Probing War's Causes.

Adoption by the Senate of the Nye-Vandenberg resolution for a sweeping inquiry into the munitions trust in this country will be hailed as an admirable move by all who are interested in exposing the causes of war. The committee of seven, which the resolution calls for, will try to determine the extent to which munitions makers encourage war through propaganda, what their profits are and whether it is desirable to create a Government monopoly to manufacture the tools of conflict. Broad powers have been given the committee so that it may require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of documents.

The committee of seven has a difficult task to perform. But if it can find out whether or not, in Senator Vandenberg's words, we shall be allowed "to live at peace among ourselves and with our neighbors without artificial encouragement to friction and misunderstanding, then to conflict, and then to disaster," it will have well spent the sum of $15,000 placed at its disposal. Senator Vandenberg spoke of "these sordid intrigues which we know to exist elsewhere." The committee's most important task is to find out if they exist here and, if they do, to suggest legislative ways to terminate them as soon as possible.

It Must Be Made Workable.

President Roosevelt is said to be opposed to any general revision of the Securities Act, although he favors modifications that would limit the liabilities of companies issuing stocks and bonds. The testimony of bankers, business men and financial experts would seem to show, however, that the Securities Act must be radically changed if it is to become a workable, regulatory measure instead of an obstacle to new financing. Mere tinkering with the law to limit the liabilities assumed by underwriters will not serve the purpose. The measure should be clarified to remove uncertainties as to its meaning. Ill-defined liabilities and unfair penalties, applicable to issuing companies and their directors as well as to underwriters, must be eliminated. Unreasonable rules and regulations together with onerous registration requirements ought to be abrogated.

The Durable Goods Committee, representing the heavy industries, says in a report to the code authorities urging liberalization of the Securities Act, that "the great majority of honest American business men and bankers have had imposed upon them such impossible liabilities and penalties that few prudent men are willing to risk the issuance or sale of securities." Protection against fraudulent issuers and unfair practices is essential, but it can be obtained without clinging to a repressive law which prevents the flotation of new capital issues and hampers the reemployment of millions of idle men dependent upon the heavy industries.

Our Schools.

Fine buildings do not make good schools any more than a house makes a home. Yet safe and comfortable quarters are an essential part of the equipment any institution must have to give children the advantages of a modern education. Children can not be expected to keep abreast of the curriculum if they must shiver in their seats on cold winter days, if they are exposed to insanitary conditions, if they are housed in overcrowded classrooms or compelled to attend on a part-time basis. All of these conditions exist in schools of the District, constituting an undeniable drag upon our educational system.

The chief problem of our schools is one of neglect. Citizens of the District unquestionably favor an efficient school system, but they are disfranchised. No doubt the Commissioners are converted to the need for more adequate school facilities, but their recommendations are pigeonholed by the Federal Budget Bureau. Congress holds to the theory that education is an essential concomitant to good citizenship, but it is either uninformed as to the actual conditions in some Washington schools or indifferent to our local problems. Consequently, children must continue to study in flimsy portable shacks, in at least one building erected during the Civil War and in several that were condemned 25 years ago.

More portable buildings will have to be brought into use if Congress fails to authorize a program of school construction. Enrollment is growing rapidly. Congress has made Washington the business as well as the political capital of the United States. Thousands of new residents, either Federal employes or persons assigned to transact business with governmental agencies, are helping to accentuate the congestion. While this influx is taking place the PWA is furnishing large sums for school construction in various parts of the country. But the acute needs of schools here in the Nation's Capital are ignored.

Allowances for education in the 1935 budget have been trimmed down to a subsistence basis. Several projects regarded as urgent for a number of years are completely left out. Obviously, this means deterioration for our educational system as a whole. With enrollment steadily increasing, standards can not be maintained without additional equipment. A series of articles in The Post is calling attention to these facts. It is important that this issue be clearly drawn and that neighborhood disputes be submerged to the larger task of securing funds for a carefully planned school-building program.

The Return.

After a fortnight's fishing in southern seas the President has returned to Washington, rested and obviously in genial mood. He doubtless realizes, more clearly than do most, the fact that much water has run down the Potomac during his absence.

Insistence on clearer definition and greater restraint in policy has strengthened and coalesced during this vacation period. This crystallization of thought is not a mere partisan phenomenon. It has formed 'round unmistakable and increasing evidence that many of the plans of the Administration have not been thought through; that their effects are obstructive rather than helpful to announced objectives, and that a revision of much that has been attempted is prerequisite to the rearing of further New Deal scaffolding.

There are signs that the President himself appreciates this fact. Certainly his own analysis—"On Our Way"—of his first year of custodianship does not reveal a mind assured by the knowledge of definite objectives. Self-confidence is present, but no more knowledge of the end sought than is possessed by the average citizen, and that means very little. When in a fog the conscientious pilot will slow down.

During his days of drifting on the blue Gulf Stream Mr. Roosevelt has probably thought deeply on matters which are difficult to focus in the rush of executive life. His keen political perceptions must have sensed the growing demand for fewer phrases and more definition in national policy. With that perception should be coupled the comforting assurance that his personal popularity has not lessened. There is the value of his present opportunity.

Looking Toward Geneva.

Normal relations between Soviet Russia and the rest of the world are being gradually strengthened. Since the Soviet exchanged Ambassadors with the United States she has persistently extended her diplomatic influence in Europe. Anti-aggression pacts have been signed with several of her neighbors. Now a dispatch from Geneva reports that the Little Entente is making arrangements to recognize the Soviet and to invite the Moscow government into the League of Nations.

Behind these developments powerful forces are at work. The Little Entente, composed of Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Rumania, is trying to strengthen its ties with Russia to counteract the menace of rampant Hitlerism in Germany. Undoubtedly the Soviet will be glad to grasp this hand of friendship, for the Kremlin, too, has misgivings as to the intentions of the Nazis. Likewise the withdrawal of Germany and Japan from the League has strengthened the ties of common interest between Moscow and Geneva. Soviet officials appear to be maneuvering for international advantages just as bourgeois and noble statesmen have done for centuries.

No more talk of world revolution is heard in Moscow. Soviet officials are among the world's most ardent advocates of peace. Tension in the Far East has emphasized the desirability of friendly contacts with European nations. It would no longer be surprising to see Russia join the League of Nations as a means of strengthening her position in any conflict with Japan. Certainly no nation situated between two potential enemies, as is the Soviet, can afford to be indifferent in its attitude toward organized world cooperation.

Although other sources of friction have become acute in recent years, this approach to normal relations between the Soviet and the rest of the world must be regarded as a step in the direction of peace and stability.

Taxing To Destroy.

The Senate has voted to eliminate from the revenue bill the section which permits corporations to make consolidated returns. By a margin of four votes it rejected a proposal to deny corporations the right to deduct from gross income the dividends received from other corporations. The debate on these two proposals revealed an unmistakable intention on the part of certain Senators to employ the power to tax as a means of regulating or penalizing holding companies. The vote to abolish consolidated returns, for example, would prevent companies affiliated through 95 per cent stock ownership from offsetting the losses of one subsidiary against the profits of another.

Senator Harrison protested that the change would impose great hardship upon some public utility companies required to take out corporate charters under the laws of numerous States. He also emphasized the fact that holding companies would be compelled in any case to pay penalty taxes of 2 per cent on consolidated returns as a means of offsetting advantages over separate corporations. But these arguments were without effect. Senator Norris replied by asserting that "ninety-five times out of a hundred the holding company is a parasite. It is organized for the express purpose of deceiving the public and for obtaining something for nothing."

The debate on the defeated amendment to eliminate deductions from dividends paid by one corporation to another revealed the same desire to make the revenue bill a disciplinary, regulatory measure. Again Senator Harrison called attention to the serious consequences of the proposed measure, pointing out that if dividends were transmitted through ten companies, payments would be subject to ten taxes. "It is now proposed," he said, "in the case of every business institution in the country that has a legitimate reserve which it desires to invest, not for speculative purposes but legitimately, in the purchase of some stock, if a dividend is declared on such stock, to put a tax upon that reserve." But his warning to the Senate against doing "something that would be unwise and that might disastrously affect certain institutions" was ignored.

Even Senator Glass announced that if he believed the adoption of the amendment would put an end to holding companies, giving them ample opportunity to readjust their business relations, he would not hesitate to vote for it. In fact he did so, in the hope of getting the subject before the conference committee for discussion.

Unless Congress shares the views of those members who want to cripple all holding companies by any means at hand, it is certainly not justified in imposing penalties upon them in the guise of taxes. Taxes should be levied for the sake of revenue. When they are used to regulate or to destroy, they fail of their primary purpose and they are likely to do incalculable damage to the business and financial structure of the country.

Not A Public Liability.

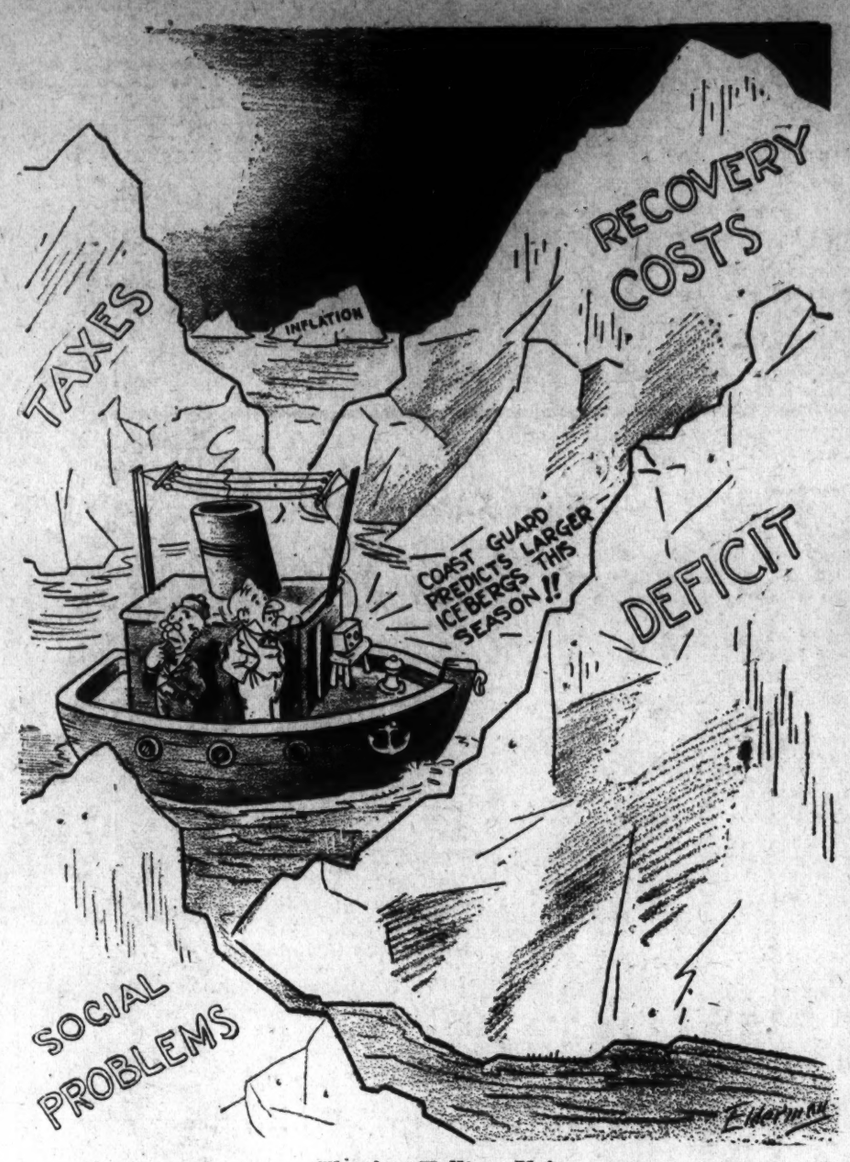
One of the latest and most outrageous of the inflationary spending proposals under consideration is the plan to reimburse depositors in closed banks. A bill reported to the House calls for payment in full on deposits up to $2,500 in all banks, National, State and private, which have been closed since January 1, 1930. Another bill, which Administration leaders are trying to sidetrack, calls for payment in full on all deposits in member banks of the Federal Reserve system. Either of these measures would necessitate payments involving sums estimated to be well in excess of $1,000,000,000.

The size of the outlay, excessive though it would be, is not the worst feature of these attempts to saddle the Federal Treasury with the losses incurred by depositors in privately owned and operated banks. The assumption that the Government has a special obligation toward depositors in these institutions is especially dangerous because of the precedents which it would establish. If bank depositors have a right to reimbursement at public expense, are not the victims of business failures, due to depression, also entitled to compensation?

Undoubtedly banking is a business "affected with a public interest," which requires a certain amount of public regulation Furthermore, in periods of crisis, emergency loans to prevent bank closings may be in the public interest, because banks are the source of the deposit currency which constitutes our chief medium of exchange. There is no logical connection, however, between protective and preventive regulation designed to maintain the solvency and successful functioning of going institutions and the proposals contained in the McLeod bills. This puts a premium upon unsound and dishonest banking practices.

The public interest is not served, but injured, by taking over worthless assets of closed or reorganized banks at the expense of the taxpayers. The inflationary possibilities of this special kind of subsidization are serious, but the injury to the public credit is not so great as the dangers resulting from governmental assumption of private losses. If Congress breaks down valid distinctions between public and private responsibilities, it will invite wholesale raids upon the Treasury and ultimate bankruptcy.

The average American is becoming very proficient at dodging. It's almost as difficult to hit him with a tax as it is with an auto.



They're Telling Us!

Rhetorical Fervor and the New Deal

INDUSTRY is for the most part bitterly opposed to the Wagner labor disputes bill. It raises many objections, some of them too emotional, it seems to us, to be seriously considered. Talk of a labor dictatorship, for instance, of a country "unionized by coercion of the Government," may be dismissed as rhetorical fervor. Nothing of the sort will happen. Whatever the New Deal will finally flower into, it will never estabish a mass dictatorship. Such an impossible order of things is as repellent to responsible labor leaders as it is to thoughtful citizens of every category.

In the American scheme, there is no permanent place for any dictatorship of any character, unless majority opinion may be so stigmatized. To those who regard majority opinion as intolerable, except when it conforms to their own notion of what's correct, the philosophy of democracy itself is an impossible doctrine.

The bete noir, or, as we now say, the big, bad wolf of the Wagner bill, from the industrial viewpoint, is the provision abolishing the company union. In theory, that proposal is open to grave challenge. Practically, the company union, with rare exceptions, has worked badly. Can it ever do otherwise?

Senator Wagner puts his finger on the fatal flaw in the company union idea. He describes it as "labor bargaining, in which the employer sits on both sides of the table." Is not that the literal and unavoidable truth?

THE relationship of master and man has been ameliorated and dignified by the genius of civilization until it is only a thirty-second cousin, say, of its feudal status. But for all the parity that has come to be between employer and employe, the fact remains that in a discussion of the quid pro quo the sun of equality goes into something of an eclipse. It is the king on one side and the subject on the other when the per diem is the question before the house.

Now, take your company union, whose representatives are chosen from its own ranks. When these men enter into negotiations with the company's executives, they are, to be sure, acting in an official capacity. They have credentials, authority, all the moral insignia. At the same time, they are employes of the men they are talking to, and they can not thrust aside the psychology of that fact. By the influence of that psychology, they are under a disadvantage as negotiators, regardless of the employer's attitude.

In ordinary affairs of dispute, it may well be that employes could be capably represented by their fellow employes, but in matters of magnitude, the better plan, it seems to us, would be for the employes to be represented by outsiders—by men specially qualified by experience, character and judgment to argue the case. This is not to say that company unions are not sometimes excellent. It is to say that they do not serve the purposes of social progress upon a broad front.

It is possible, certainly conceivable, that, as collective bargaining develops under the law, the process of negotiation will become something of an art, and presently we shall have the profesional negotiator. Professions, after all, are an answer to the needs of the individual or society that require specialized training and knowledge.

ANOTHER thing industry must learn. It must learn to see in the long lists of pay rolls the names of consumers as well as the names of workers. Industry must see in its employes the market for its goods. When it does see that collective bargaining will lose much, if not all, of its controversial atmosphere and move into the realm of managerial council.

It goes without saying that such a great social reform as this presupposes can not be brought about in the spirit of warfare which has existed between labor and capital. Both sides are obligated to the new order, as much by their responsibility to us all as by their loyalty to their own interests. Italy has shown us how this vexed issue can be made as orderly as all equity causes have long been in courts. She outlaws strikes and lockouts. She has set up courts to which all disputants must take their cases, and the judgments of these tribunals are absolute. This is obviously the way in which we are also going.

None of us, let us hope, holds the difficulties ahead of us lightly, as none of us should be blind to the faults of either labor or capital. Both have their rights, and each must respect the rights of the other. Only so can the supreme right of society itself be served.

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

Repudiates Quotation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of April 6 appears a letter signed "Antivivisectionist," in which I am quoted as saying, "There is no rabies. It is a mental foible in the minds of you doctors."

The statement is obviously preposterous. I have written so much on the subject of rabies under my own signature, stating definitely the scientific facts as to its origin and methods of distribution, that any enlightened newspaper editor should have known better than to have permitted an anonymous correspondent to quote me in this manner.

The idea that I did make such a statement could only arise in the disordered mind of some antivaccinationist, antivivisectionist and antiscientific fanatic, but one hardly expects the misquotations to be promulgated and disseminated by an intelligent editor.

MORRIS FISHBEIN.

Redistribution of Wealth.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Early in 1932 Mr. Roosevelt made a speech in Georgia in which he referred to the necessity for a more equitable distribution of income or wealth. He has sponsored some very excellent starting legislation, but it seems he is still unprepared to bring forth a real program with the declared purpose of bringing about a more equitable distribution of income.

The real reason for our present plight is the fact that during and since the war enormous profits were made by a few of the financiers and industrialists, but comparatively little was permitted to filter through to the working class and masses. These profits were, of course, made possible by modern methods and machinery, but the working classes, who are also the consumers, were not permitted to get a large enough share to buy back their production. Surpluses were accumulated, production was stopped and unemployment prevailed.

The most effective way for a more equitable distribution of income is through taxation. Our present income tax laws, assuming the Couzen's amendment will become a part of the law, is a big step in that direction, but it would seem to me that since it is the President's desire to raise wages and salaries, an effective method of taxing the excess profits with a definite tie-up or relation to the wages paid would be a much more effective method of increasing wages than NRA with 600 codes and thousands of individual firms and corporations all having varying degrees of earning power, working under many of the 600 codes.

With an administrative force of half the present NRA personnel, a fair return on capital investments in practically all industries could be determined. Each industry or firm would be given a rating of what would be considered a fair return on the investment and after a fair return was realized, if the firm and all firms within the borders of the United States and protected by our present tariff and money systems, were taxed at the rate of 99 per cent of the excess profits and then this tax were lowered gradually as the wages rose within the organization, such a tax could be an effective and enforceable method of raising wages and bringing about the more equitable distribution of income.

But, of course, before there will be any profits or incomes of any importance people must be put back to work and taken off doles. This would require the expenditure of several more billions of dollars than have yet been given any publicity by the "best minds" in statesmanship. So maybe there is something to Prof. Wirt's fears of prolonging the depression until our present form of Government can be changed.

H. H. LINDER.
Washington, April 12.

Filmed Books.

From Washington comes the rather surprising statement that the Library of Congress has now no less than a million reproductions of books and manuscripts on photographic films. Dr. Martin, of the library's division of manuscripts, explains that the photographs are taken page by page on movie films, a 35-foot reel taking 560 pages, at a cost of 3 cents or so a page. The image of each page can be projected in turn in much the same way as the old-time lantern slide.

The scheme could no doubt be amplified so as to supply every important library with a film of every rare or unique book. It should render possible the consultation by scholars of books that they might otherwise have to travel thousands of miles to see. It ought to do away with the risk of wearing such books out with constant use.

Apart from that the plan may find a welcome among scholars and others who have weak eyes and suffer from the strain of poring over small print or queer handwriting. Perhaps some readers may yet become educated to using film and projector in their own homes, rather than read the printed page itself. The practice of reading the current issue of the daily paper in the subway is another matter. A newspaper can not be read like a book consecutively from end to end. Newspapers will no doubt go on being turned, folded, rustled and doubled over. Certainly a crossword puzzle projected on a screen would not let us pencil the letters in while the stations on the homeward route flashed by.

The Post Impressionist

A Kind Word for the Censor.

Postoffice, Saturday.

Speaking of censorships—as we were, the other day:

Speaking of censorships, what about the movies?

• • • •

Everybody knows that, some time since, this industry announced its intention to censor itself—and some laughed at the idea of self-censorship, forgetting that it is the only kind of censorship which is not easily evaded. Then followed vague rumors of internal disputes over the necessary "Code"—and many laughed again, presumably because disputes at Hollywood always seem mildly amusing. Finally, the news was published that the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., had agreed on their prohibitions—and, because the NRA soon came along with its own brand of codes for all and sundry, the great world of trade continued to go to the movies without ever thinking of the movies' self-censorship.

"That code?" cried, the other evening, one weary manufacturer who rests his brain at a motion picture theater thrice weekly. "Why, I thought that was canned long ago! Did it ever function? And is it still functioning?"

We couldn't answer him. But we knew a movie man who could.

• • • •

"It's a whale of a document," said the movie man. "It was composed by a Code Committee of 50 or 60 experts—church people, lawyers, educators, editors. But it boils down to this: We musn't produce a picture that can lower the moral standards of anybody who sees it.

"I'm not arguing about it. I'm telling you what it is. The vast majority of the people who control public opinion in America wanted a code like that for our industry. So they got it.

"Wherever it's possible under the requirements of drama, we must show what that majority considers the correct standards of living. Writer, producer, director and actor all have to try to keep the audience from sympathy for wrong-doing. Consequently, writer, producer, director and actor all have to try to keep the audiences' sympathy on the side of right.

• • • •

"There's a whole staff of hawk-eyed censors or supervisors in the executive department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors' Association whose special job it is to see that we toe the mark. And, believe me, the young fusion party watcher at a municipal election hasn't anything on them for vigilance! Just now, Joseph I. Breen is the code administrator.

"Don't you read the trade papers? I don't mean the flossy magazines published for screen fans, full of photographs and romantic interviews with stars—through their press-agents—and ghost-written 'autobiographies.' I mean the real trade papers for the real people in the trade—the Motion Picture Herald and such. No? All right; I'll tell you how the system works.

• • • •

"It works from script to screen. "Eleven of the big companies are members of the association. When any one of those companies accepts a script, the first thing done with it—before a costume's bought, let alone a camera clicked—is turning it over to those supervisors. They read it line by line—with one eye on the text of the Code. Wherever they think they see a code violation in word, sequence or situation, they mark it—if they think it can be remedied. If they think the whole thing's bad, they just put their big X on the title-page—"

• • • •

N. B.: At that point we hoped that readers of The Post Impressionist are not similarly meticulous.

• • • •

"Suppose," continued the movie man, "a case where just certain portions are objectionable. The supervisors know that, no matter what code changes may be made to the script, changes of other sorts—'write-ins,' we call them—are always made during the shooting: a director gets ideas while he goes along. So, as soon as the film's finished on the lot, the code supervisors look it over, to see their own changes have been made and whether everything else that has been put in is O. K. If everything's all right, why, it's all right. Otherwise, the supervisor 'rejects' it. He can reject the entire film if he wants to. Then the case can go to the whole Code Committee.

• • • •

"Next, the supervisor or the producer can appeal from them to a jury of three other producers, who get together in a projection-room and are given a special showing—association producers rotate in jury service. Then there's one more appeal possible for either party: to the association's board of directors.

"Often the practice is worse than the theory. The producer may kick at cuts at first; often he ends by doing more than was asked. That new musical piece, 'Bottoms Up'—it hasn't had a Washington showing yet: it went to a jury, and the jury passed it, and then the makers remade a lot of it anyhow—got stricter than the committee.

• • • •

"Does the scheme work? Listen! Here's Victor Shapiro's latest lowdown in the M. P. Herald: Before the Code came in, only six pictures were 'rejected' in three years. But now? Well, the Code Committee rejected that many in eight weeks following February 1, and, out of this half-dozen, the producers made the alterations that were asked in five cases—and dished No. 6 altogether!"

We started wondering, and are still wondering, whether the movie industry will ever become as solicitous for the mentality of its audiences as it seems to be for their moral perfection.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

OH, I suppose there will be all sorts of interpretations placed on the reception by Congress of Mr. Roosevelt yesterday. There will be a listing of the number of Republicans as against the number of Democrats. There will be discussions as to whether it was simply a carefully arranged stunt by the Democrats to ballyhoo their leader or whether it means that he will reassume the hold over the legislative body that he had when he went away.

It is my frank belief that nothing underlay the reception more than the Democrats' weakness for parades. To a Democrat the opportunity to parade is irresistible. There is nothing better he likes to do. It is a heritage of the South where the party has its greatest strength. Strike up a band around the Democrats and they will fall in line any time.

BARGERON.

* * * *

What Miss Perkins does not know is that there is music in the toes of those Southerners on whom she wanted to put shoes. A tune on a jewsharp, even the rhythm that can be made to go through a hair-comb wrapped in paper and placed to the mouth will send a tingle through those pedal digits. A brass band throws them into a frenzy.

I do not know, but I'll bet that in yesterday's parade every Southerner and the Irish Democrats of the East were in step with their chests thrown out, while Speaker Rainey and the Farmer-Laborites and other isms of the West who have come under the Democratic banner, just ambled along.

Anyway it was from the Southern wing of the party that the inspiration for the parade came. Of course, it was. It was too good a parade opportunity for the Southerners to miss.

* * * *

I think it was Mr. Roosevelt's knowledge of human nature, too, his realization that these boys simply wanted to parade that caused him not to take it seriously enough to make more than a facetious speech. He knows they would rather parade than eat.

Strike up a band down South any day and the clouds pass away. They are all minstrels at heart down there. It's the reason they are giving us such a good show.

For those Southern Democrats, yesterday was a Saturday night. They washed their faces, put on their spats, their striped trousers and their frock coats and twirled a cane as they walked. They were just a bunch of Al G. Fields doing their stuff. Hot dog! Hot jiggety jig!

A parade, a parade! I'd rather have one any day than food. A parade on Memorial Day, on St. St. Patrick's Day, on the Fourth of July, on Saturday night—and now when Mr. Roosevelt comes to town.

And in many places of the South they have a parade on Sunday, too. It is the colored folk that parade then. If one of their number dies on Monday, provided he is a member in good standing of the Ancient Order of the Rising Sun, or some similar burial society, they hold him on tap until the following Sunday—and parade, in purple and black and indigo—and do they step along, ummmph!

Ask the Southerners to forego their parades because they are in the Nation's Capital? Hell, no; they'll tear up the Stars and Stripes first!

It's what they wanted with a Democratic President, to parade him.

* * * *

Yesterday's parade holds no mysteries for me. No ulterior motives do I impute to the Democrats. The only thing about it that I can't understand was the attitude of Senator Borah.

He jumped up indignantly in the Senate and protested that he had not been invited. The Democrats assured him that he would be welcome—the more the merrier. Then he didn't show up.

What's the matter? Has he got bunions?

U. S. Weaves Links Against Cannon's Aid

Bishop Quoted as Saying He Destroyed All Files, Letters.

signed checks, made out deposit slips, and wrote letters for Bishop Cannon on matters relating to 1928 campaign contributions, the defense declined to admit she wrote to Jameson on January 5, 1929, thanking him for his "generous support."

Has Denied Knowledge.

Miss Burroughs has deposed she was unaware of any Jameson contributions until Cannon revealed them to her February 11, 1929, and that she then had knowledge of only $17,300 of the New Yorker's donations of more than five times that sum.

The Government began yesterday its drive to show Miss Burroughs typed the letter of January 5, 1929, at the bishop's dictation, declaring to Jameson that without his contributions the success of the anti-Smith campaign would not have been possible. If she did, the Government contends, it is obvious she knew of Jameson as the campaign "angel" before February 11 of that year.

Wilson also brought out, through reading Cannon's statement to the United States attorney in 1931, that Miss Burroughs and the bishop worked together on February 11, 1929, over what the Government calls the "highlight report" to Congress—the report in which Jameson's contributions are listed as totaling only $17,300.

Free Use of Money Revealed.

The bishop's free use of the so-called "Jameson money" also was revealed by his 1931 testimony, in which he admitted having $17,000 on hand at a time when he was soliciting funds to meet a "deficit" and was trying to get committees and individuals to pay him back money he had given them for campaign purposes the previous fall.

Reading of the bishop's statement provided the high spot of a day devoted otherwise to the prosecution's attempt to prove there actually was no State anti-Smith committee in Virginia, and the defense's introduction, out of turn, of a witness who wasn't even certain there was a "Headquarters Committee" or anything else.

Of Miss Burroughs, the bishop said at that time (1931) that she preserved the headquarters committee's checks for two years "and then, of course, she dropped them like a hot potato."

Cannon's statement also contained the admission that he examined Miss Burroughs' report to Congress "in a general way," and told of his withdrawals from what he called "the Jameson account" to pay bills and reimburse himself for bad debts, as he came to consider his own campaign contributions which were not promptly repaid.

McNeill Rebuked.

"There was no other place to get it," the bishop explained.

Robert H. McNeill, chief of the defense counsel, drew a rebuke from the bench after a pyrotechnic display of emotionalism early in the day. He denounced as an "outrage" the court's failure to let in certain testimony he sought to bring out in cross-examination of Lee P. Oliver, of the Department of Justice.

"I intend to support my client's rights if the heavens fall," he shouted.

"You will get your rights here, and the heavens won't have to fall, either," Judge Gordon retorted. "And I don't propose to have you telling me what is or is not an outrage in this court."

The bishop bubbled over with laughter at this sally, apparently highly amused at his counsel's discomfiture.

One defense witness was heard yesterday, although the prosecution will not rest until Tuesday at the earliest. Frank Lyon, a Virginia attorney, who stumped his district for Hoover in 1928, was permitted to testify because of an engagement in New Orleans Monday.

Virginian Still Bitter.

Obviously still rancorous on the subject of Smith's candidacy, the Virginian declared he had voted the Democratic ticket for 40 years until 1928, and hadn't done so since.

"I don't know what the Democratic party is now," he said.

Nor, it developed, did he know anything much about the activities of the Anti-Smith Democrats in Virginia. He never had heard of the "headquarters committee," although he had received a letter on its stationery and had attended the Asheville (N. C.) conference which led to its formation.

Henry G. Luhring, who served as treasurer of the Greater Norfolk Anti-Smith Club in 1928, testified—over the most strenuous sort of objections by defense attorneys—that he knew of no State committee conducting a campaign against the Democratic standard bearer, except for Bishop Cannon's own "headquarters" group.

The Once Over

If America Went Russian.

("Moscow—The Soviet government, holding that night-club life retards business, is conducting a drive against it and has arrested and jailed scores of officials, adding to their humiliation by making public their names." — News item).

Washington agents of the NMWA (No More Whoopee Administration) swept through Broadway last night and conducted one of the biggest round-ups of tired business men in months. "That's what is making 'em tired," declared the chief Federal officer, pointing to a wagon full of executives taken from various night clubs.

P. Quincy Whoozoo, well-known railroad president, was snatched from a taxicab in which he started home with Trixie Jeanette, Follies beauty, early this morning. No explanation was made except that it was on orders from Washington. "It is Whoozoo's second offense," said the arresting agent. "We can't seem to get him to fix his mind on the recovery program."

Two members of the New Deal boards, whose names will be released through all press associations tomorrow, have been dismissed from service, following their discovery dancing with paper hats on in a Manhattan penthouse yesterday morning. One of them was singing "For I'm to Be Queen of the May."

Things like this explain why some of the recovery drives are so cockeyed, the Administration contends. Three steel magnates, public utilities czars and five big oil men, who failed to show up at quarterly meetings today, were found to have been in jail since last Saturday night. They are charged with violating the Government limit of one floor show a week for industrial leaders.

As Winchell Might Report It.

What prominent textile magnate was poured back into the bottle at the Club Petite by orders from the NRA? . . . The J. Cheeseby Gouts (copper industry) and Roosevelt have phfft . . . Alcohol trouble . . .

Things that burn me up . . . Fan dancers who go on with their act in the presence of big business men, thus imperiling the whole recovery plan. . . . What well-known tobacco king will be incarcerated by Uncle Sam any day now for exceeding his quota of one fight a month with night club waiters? . . .

* * * *

Add coming events. . . . The imprisonment in Atlanta of Dolores Ramazon, latest night club sensation . . . It seems the lady allowed an important basic commodities man to drink too much gigglewater in her company on two distinct occasions. . . . Administration insiders are quietly probing a report that a member of the Brain Trust was singing "Ti li! Hi lo!" in one of the better clubs recently.

The Source of Supply.

President Roosevelt has returned from fishing and will now stick close to Congress, where he can always get a supply of nice fat worms.

Gov. Ely of Massachusetts thinks the President should tell us where we are going from here. With all those changes in road maps how can the President tell?

A chain of orange drink stands was sold in a New York bankruptcy court the other day. Victims of a big squeeze, would you say?

George M. Cohan, according to Variety, says that he gets thousands of letters a day as a result of his radio appearances and that most of them ask, "What did you do before you went on the air?"

Izzat So?

This department's recent inquiry, "What's become of the old-fashioned fellow who used to be so interested in his job that he used to come in and work nights now and then?" seems to have started something. "He is looking for work," writes Frank T. Kelly. "The guy who took his old job at half the money now works every night."

Another Letter From a Dad to His Red-Headed Daughter

By Robert Quillen

My dear Louise: Now that you are beginning to wonder what to do with your life, let me give you two words of caution that will save you from needless anxiety and a mistake that might prove tragic.

The first is this: Don't expect to build Rome in less than the usual time.

I get letters from young people who are discouraged and bitter because their first efforts haven't set the world afire.

Some of them are fledgling authors, sensitive as a sore thumb, and their first rejection slips seem as final as a no-admittance sign.

You will feel that way, too, when you hear the world's first indifferent "no," and here is balm for your hurts.

The first effort of a great genius sometimes brings success. If your first effort doesn't, you probably aren't a genius—not a lucky one, anyway.

What then? Well, people who aren't geniuses have to keep on trying, year after year, to win the world's acclaim and start a bank account.

If that is true—and a little reading of biography will show you how very true it is—why should you expect anything better?

If everybody else has to walk a long, hard road to get there, what right have you to feel discouraged or think yourself uncommonly ill-treated because Nature doesn't change the rule and give you a short cut?

One slap isn't proof of hard luck if everybody else got a dozen.

The other word is somewhat similar.

You are told that education really isn't necessary because Ford got rich and famous without it.

Well, here again is the question of genius.

If you know you are a feminine Ford, don't waste time on further education. But what if it turns out that you aren't?

Ford was a poor nobody until after the age of 40. Can you wait that long to find out whether you are a genius to whom education isn't necessary?

Don't let such fellows fool you. They have no education, but other fellows in the same fix are digging ditches for them.

You need little training to "take in sewing," but you will need a great deal to become another Poiret or Worth.

She sued in the Washington County Court but later obtained a removal of the case to Allegany County. The defendant then obtained a removal to this county.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

Alice Duer Miller.

I have just finished the latest story by this admirable American novelist, and it is a pleasure to express as publicly as possible the gratitude I feel for the number of entertaining and diverting books that she has written. She is, like other authors who are able to write cleverly and maintain a steady high level of excitement, a public benefactor. You can not go wrong on her books; any volume with her name written on the title-page is certain to arouse and hold your attention. Her style sparkles with humor, and although she has such a power of satire that I should be sorry for any one whom she selected as a victim, her irony is without venom.

A remarkable feature of her work is that she is absolutely up to the minute, without ever being oversophisticated. No one is more distinctly aware of what is going on in the world than she is. To read her books is to become more familiar with what men and women are thinking and saying at the present moment. She gives also unconsciously a lesson in good manners. But she never tries to be smart; her work has that perfect urbanity that needs no emphasis.

This latest story is called "Come Out of the Pantry" and it is as exciting as a high-power murder story, while dealing only with the well-bred and fashionable folk. Even they are human. It is a sheer delight to read such a book.

It would be a mistake to suppose that because Alice Duer Miller prefers to be diverting rather than didactic there is nothing to learn from her books. There is something important to be learned in every one of them. And in her tragic narrative verse, "Forsaking All Others," there is something of the deepest import; while in her novel, "Green Isle," occurs this passage, which should be read and thought over by all teachers and learners:

"Strangely enough, there is nowhere the average person can go to learn how to live his daily life. Children are taught Latin and astronomy, but no school or college tells them how to clear their mind for a decision, how to tell certain psychological, or even psychopathic types, and how to deal with them; how, for any individual to draw the line between idleness and serenity, between overwork and fullness of life, between sweet charity and being every man's dupe. Everybody needs such instruction, something halfway between religious precepts and practical talks to salesmen. Women need it particularly, for they do not get, as early as men do, the experience of the business world."

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall

FICTION seems to have gone in for a mild boom of insanity these days. Perhaps insanity is not the word. Perhaps even there is no telling, as Miss Phyllis Bottome has rather ponderously suggested, that a line may be drawn at all between normal and abnormal mentality. But we can leave such nice distinctions to the pundits and still notice that Miss Bottome's "Private Worlds" floundered knee-deep in psychiatry, that Conrad Aiken's "Among the Lost People" made less academic fuss and dealt far better with human aberrations.

THEO. HALL.

Now up steps F. Scott Fitzgerald, trying manfully to put behind him his famed improvisations on the Jazz Age, to give us a novel whose claim to adulthood seems to be a dark and murmurous voicing on the topic of schizophrenia. "Tender Is the Night" (Scribner, $2.50) bases its drama on a young woman thus afflicted with "split-personality"—roughly, the "Jekyll and Hyde" complex. The result is very curious. For the novel itself, in its structure, mood and purpose, appears markedly schizophrenic. Is this splitting, this shelving away from stability, an effect Mr. Fitzgerald wrought consciously? That, I believe, is almost too true to be good.

For a third of the book we gaze enchanted on the bright and charming surfaces of Dr. Richard Diver and his wife, Nicole—wealthy Americans summering in a small resort on the French Riviera. Both are handsome and poised; he especially enchants people. Around them are Rosemary Hoyt, budding young movie star, "who had magic in her pink palms and cheeks lit to a lovely flame;" Tommy Barban, bronzed wanderer, who has already fought under eight flags; Abe North, wit and hard drinker, and a number of assorted novelists, musicians, titled gentry, and so on. The like of these we have all known before; any novel reader can people the Riviera with such types and fill in the outline of their opulent, prankish, sun-basking days. But Dick and Nicole are far different. Their perfection seems unique. Rosemary admires them enormously and falls flat in love with Dick. Then there is a hint or two of something below this splendid gloss, and we swing into the second part and a back-tracking over the Divers' lives.

100,000 in Oil Union Threaten Wage Walkout

Southern Coal Operators to Take Pay Dispute to Roosevelt.

tween labor and employers in the industry mean "an economic war, you're going to get it and you'll get it good. Now don't forget it."

He demanded a return to 1929 salaries and a 30-hour week. He charged there has been general demoralization of the oil industry under the petroleum code and that employment has decreased steadily since October.

At the same hearing H. J. Carr, general vice president of the International Association of Machinists, which has members in the oil industry, said labor was not "going to stand" for bringing down wages anywhere near the levels recommended. He demanded the same wage level as in July, 1929, with hours remaining at 36.

Assails Consolidation.

Freming also attacked recent plant construction, which further reduced employment.

As strike threats were being hurled here and in Detroit in the oil, coal and automobile industries, according to the Associated Press, the other side of the scale produced fattening wage envelopes in other industries.

Sailors and silver makers were recipients of cheering news.

Ten per cent wage increases were applied to the minimum scale for 13,000 sailors of the Great Lakes Carriers Association, and indications pointed toward arrival of the eight-hour day on the lakes.

R. Wallace & Co., silverware makers at Wallingford, Conn., handed its 1,000 employes a 10 per cent raise.

Pay Boosts Announced.

Wage boosts of various sizes were announced at the Corning, N. Y., glass works and the Ingersoll-Rand plant at Painted Post.

The automobile industry was grinding out cars at top speed, headed for probably the biggest month's production in four years, but menaced, nevertheless, by walkouts.

Detroit tool and die workers numbering 3,000 quietly quit work, while union leaders went about negotiating individual agreements with manufacturers and shops. No disorders arose and more apprehension was felt over possible outbreaks of strikes in the automobile industry itself.

A dispute over lunch hours at the Viscose Co. in Lewiston, Pa., drew 4,000 employes out on strike.

Seven strikers were arrested at New York in a stone battle between pickets and employes of the Teleradio Engineering Corporation.

Take Vote on Strike.

Employes of the Chance Vought Co., airplane builders at Hartford, Conn., met last night to vote on joining the strike of 1,500 workers at two other aviation plants.

Shopmen of the Underwood-Elliot-Fisher Co. at Hartford told the National Labor Board the company was violating an agreement reached last month.

Cleveland and Ravenna plants of the Cleveland Worsted Mills Co. remained closed with 1,800 on strike.

Check on Law Practice Sought.

Roanoke, Va., April 13 (Spl.).—Members of the Roanoke Bar Association are recommending that a committee be appointed to keep watch on the unauthorized practice of law.

Pre-School Clinic Planned.

Lexington, Va., April 13 (Spl.).—The Lexington-Rockbridge Health Department has announced a clinic to be held May 1, 2, 3 and 4 to examine children who will enter school next fall.

It is almost incredible that a narration of the tragedy which fell upon rich, Chicago-born Nicole, of Dick's efforts while a poor and rising psychiatrist to save her, and of their marriage and her all but complete restoration, should bring about such a dampening of the book's mood. True, we go back in time. We now see the story from inside Dick—the first part was through Rosemary. And yet, with that much understood—and the knowledge is like a threading black river—it remains past belief that Nicole's and Dick's exteriors could have been so suave as we first saw them. Only once or twice again do we see them thus.

For a subtle disintegration has set in with Dick. Nicole's wealth has softened him. Her dependence on him has grown stifling. He refused Rosemary at first; he did not refuse her five years later. Fired with professional zeal to set up a clinic in Switzerland, he loses it. Where once he was debonair, adept with moods and people, he is now slovenly, distraught, increasingly dissipated.

And while he goes downhill, Nicole rises. It is as if his loss of strength asserted and emboldened her independence. The end rushes up—Nicole remarried, Dick lost in a small country practice in New York State. And the lovely title quivers with irony.

* * * *

Mr. Fitzgerald, for all the years since "This Side of Paradise" and "The Great Gatsby," has changed but little. Technically, he is still one of the ablest of his generation—though he indulges in some involved and precious writing which was happily absent from the Saturday Evening Post stories with which he filled the gap of time.

Yet he is still the narrator of "all these sad young men" and women. He is still delicately and engagingly bilious. But where once his naive liver balked at the obvious facts of life, it has now grown recherche and demands stronger stuff. If psychiatrics provide that, well and good for our author. But if psychiatrics are to be used as prop and proof for a belated and non-growing Jazz Age-ian, then something is mighty funny with American letters.

"Tender Is the Night" stands as good, but not great, Fitzgerald.

Jokes About Escort.

"It is remarkable that I should need an escort of seven," Insull said jokingly last night as he was being taken aboard a little coastwise steamer from Istanbul to Panderma. "I'm perfectly harmless."

Later when somebody at his dinner table jestingly asked why he ever went to Istanbul, he replied brightly, "I'm beginning to wonder myself."

Insull slept soundly last night as the ship, the Adana, proceeded toward Panderma, where she arrived at 3 a. m. He was taken ashore at 6:15, and a half hour later was aboard the train for Smyrna. He arrived at the latter place at 8:30 o'clock tonight.

And ye shall serve the Lord your God, and He shall bless thy bread, and thy water; and I will take sickness away from the midst of thee" (Exodus 23:20-25). Forgiveness Is World's Hope

One Bed-Rock Virtue May Bring Peace; Jesus Stressed Magnanimity as an Essential to Civilization.

By William T. Ellis.

Great times call for great human qualities. Our present peril is that men will not be big enough for the day. France recently came close to the brink of revolution because of popular resentment against the pettiness and selfishness of the Chamber of Deputies. There have been plenty of similar instances nearer home of smallness in high place. The average politician is a picayune personality. This lack of large character equipment is a real peril of our times.

Right here the world needs the help of Jesus. He was not only "big" Himself, but He taught bigness to His followers. There was not a mean or small streak anywhere in Jesus. In hours of greatest stress, He showed Himself a mightier, more magnanimous man than the highest Roman official, the topmost Jewish ecclesiastic of the foremost social and business leaders. They had, for the moment, power over His body; but His soul commanded them. In His last dying gesture He towered over all His foes, by the height of a cross crying, "Father, forgive them." The man who is great enough to forgive always overtops his adversary.

This Backwoods World.

We have forgiveness for the theme of this lesson; and while, primarily, its application is personal, we can not overlook its large social significance. It is unforgiveness that has messed up Europe. A vindictive Versailles Treaty has been the soil of a harvest of hatreds. Because victors were not themselves magnanimous enough to forgive, we see a continent on the brink of war, apparently hopelessly irreconcilable in its international malevolence.

Feuds are understandable in remote and ignorant communities. But the big world can not be run on the basis of backwoods rivalries, vengeances and reprisals. Reducing armaments will not bring peace; nothing else but changing minds will. If the magnanimity of Jesus could find lodgment in Europe's opinions, the world would be freed from the present nightmare of an imminent war. Nations even as individuals, can not live comfortably together unless they can learn to forgive. Antipathies, boycotts and tariff conflicts all have in them the fertile seeds of self-destruction. God send us statesmen with sufficient moral grandeur to rise above unforgivingness.

Industrial strife, which casts its dark shadow over the present scene, likewise can be dissipated only by a new state of mind in both opposing groups. If labor, burning with resentment, is going to "show" capital; and if employers intend to "put the workingman in his place," we can hope for nothing but ever-increasing strife, consummating in National disaster. Nothing but the mind that was in Christ Jesus is adequate for this hour. Forgiveness, forbearance, fairness and friendliness are absolute requisites to solving of the day's major economic problems.

Rising Above Mathematics.

Simon Peter, that disciple who was so often perplexed and perplexing, brought up the issue which is the basis of our lesson. Probably he was in difficulty with one of the other members of the group. So he posed this question to Jesus: "Lord, how often shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? Until seven times?"

That was rather a generous gesture of Peter's, for the rabbionical teaching was that an erring brother should be forgiven three times. Nevertheless, it was based on the bad idea of mathematics in morals and religion. There are some persons who never rise above this notion of bookkeeping righteousness. They balance their good deeds against their bad—as if mortal were ever able to tell which is really which! The idea survives strongly in non-Christian religions. But Jesus, who taught the preeminence of the spirit, would have none of this miserable clerkliness in things of the soul, and swept away Peter's rather selfrighteous theory with the reply. "I say not unto thee, until seven times; but, until seventy-times seven"—that is, indefinitely. There are no metes and bounds to the exercise of spiritual graces. Limitless as hope and love must be the quality of forgiveness.

The Significant Imperative.

Novelists and biographers are fond of describing their heroes as men "who never forgot a friend or forgave an enemy." Bunk! No man can live a normal life without having to show forgiveness. There is not room in any normal sphere for continuing hatred. Everybody must, at some time or other, walk the Jesus path of pardon.

There is something almost uncannily basic and awesome about this matter of forgiveness, in the Christian Way. Jesus made it the door to heaven. He said there was no hope of forgiveness for the unforgiving. Into the Model Prayer, which millions repeat daily, He put the dread imperative, "Forgive us * * * as we forgive." We dare ask no more of God than we extend to our brother. Unless we know how to forgive we may not hope to be forgiven. Except we forgive, we can not even pray. As we ponder the thought we wonder if the Master was looking forward to the essential part that forgiveness must play in the ongoing of a tranquil and brotherly world order?

Truth in a Tale.

As usual, the Great Story Teller expanded His reply to Peter into a parable. He likened the Kingdom of Heaven to a certain king, one of whose officials owed him a vast sum. Since he could not pay, the king ordered the sale of all his possessions. But the servant pleaded eloquently, and, moved with compassion, the king forgave him the debt.

Whereupon the pardoned servant went out and found a fellow servant who owed him a comparatively trifling sum. He took him by the throat, saying, "Pay what thou owest!" His victim pleaded for time, but the creditor was merciless, and cast him into prison.

News of the incident came to the king's ears. He summoned the man, and challenged him strenly, "Shouldest not thou also have had mercy on thy fellow servant, even as I had mercy on thee?" Outraged, the king delivered the unforgiving debtor to the tormentors.

In grim and portentous words, Jesus gave the meaning of the parable: "So shall also my heavenly Father do unto you, if ye forgive not every one his brother from your hearts." No comment is necessary to make plain the supreme importance that God places upon forgiveness.

The Everydayness of It.

The only man who can afford never to forgive is the one who never sins. For forgiveness by heaven is clearly made conditional upon our own willingness to forgive. The truth runs deep into everyday life. When we recall the rivalries that prevail in almost every shop and office; the jealousies that divide neighborhoods; the scholastic and professional envyings; the strife in individual homes, we perceive that this solemn teaching concerning forgiveness strikes deep into the everydayness of life.

Obvious are the implications. If you can not forgive, you thereby may know that you have a small soul, untouched by the Spirit of Jesus. This is a test virtue. Only the magnanimous are mighty. In the school of forgiveness the great lessons of life are learned. Every character that is at all Christlike is able to forgive.

Forgiveness does not make one spineless. Manhood is not emasculated by its exercise. The forgiving Christ heaped hot words of condemnation upon the Pharisees. He called Herod an "old fox." He drove the moneychangers out of the Temple, in scorn and blazing indignation. But note that these were all offenders against righteousness and the common good. Those who had wronged Him personally, Jesus forgave.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

Some Guns, Rules, Work Both Ways

"We've got his gun;
"We'll have some fun,
"And see him run,
"Before we're done."

That's the song all the creek folks were singing the next day after they had such a good time eating Mr. Man's turkeys. Jocko Monkey was the only one of them that could shoot the gun, and so he had to kill all the rabbits for the neighborhood. It was lots easier to shoot a rabbit than it was to run him down and catch him.

But Blackie said it wouldn't be safe to shoot the gun close enough to Mr. Man's house for him to hear it, and so they had to go a long way up the creek, even to the other side of the old goat house, before they thought they were far enough from Mr. Man's house for him not to hear it.

Pretty Wise Bird.

It looked like everybody on the creek wanted to go along to see Jocko shoot the gun. Even Who-Who Owl, who always sleeps in the daytime, went with them. Who-Who is a pretty wise bird, and he asked Blackie if he had ever seen a gun kick. Blackie said he didn't know whether or not a gun could kick, but if anybody wanted to know whether a donkey could kick he could tell him. Of course, this made Billie Possum grin, for he had once seen a donkey kick.

They hadn't gone far past the old goat house when Blackie reared on his hind feet and said: "Listen! I am sure I heard a goose. I'll bet some of Uncle Joe's geese are swimming down the creek. Fly ahead, Jay Bird, and come back and tell us what you see."

In a few minutes Jay Bird came back and told Blackie that about a dozen geese were in the creek swimming, and were just around the bend. So they all crawled along right easy till they got in sight of the geese.

Loaded for Bear.

Then Who-Who Owl spoke up again and said, "Jocko, that gun is mighty heavy, and it's loaded for bear, so for fear it should kick like I have seen guns do, you had better rest it on Blackie's back. Then have Dr. Coon and Billie Possum stand behind you to hold you up if the gun should kick."

So Jocko put the gun across Blackie's back, and Billie Possum and Dr. Coon stood close behind him so as to catch him if the gun should kick. Blackie stood right still while Jocko got a good aim at the geese and fired both barrels. "Pow-wow!" If anybody should ask Jocko Monkey, Dr. Coon or Billie Possum whether a gun can kick, he would hear all three of them scream, "Yes!"

That gun certainly did kick, and all three of them rolled over each other just like the somersault fellows you see rolling over in a circus. It was the only thing that ever happened that didn't make Billie Possum grin, but he certainly couldn't find anything in that bump to laugh about.

Works Both Ways.

When he picked himself up, and was able to talk he said that he always thought guns couldn't shoot but one way.

Then Who-Who Owl said "Well, as a rule they do, but this is one of those rules that works both ways. Besides, you know Mr. Man had that gun loaded to kill Blackie—loaded for bear, as he says. It's no wonder it kicked."

That brought the grin back to Billie Possum, for he thought it was pretty smart in Who-Who to say such a thing.

But Jocko Monkey was mighty anxious to see what had happened at the other end of the gun; so as soon as he picked himself up he ran down to the water to see if he had hit a goose. He found that the two loads had killed four geese, and every one was lying flat on his back in the water, with his feet sticking straight up. Blackie was the best swimmer in the party, so he went in and brought the geese out.

"What are we going to do with all this meat, Blackie," said Dr. Coon. "With all the meat and corn and apples and other things that we got at Mr. Man's house last night, and all these turkeys, I don't know what we are going to do with them.

Smokehouse Planned.

"Well," said Blackie, "I know what we are going to do—build us a smokehouse; for now we have a gun and we can get enough meat to have some on hand all the time, and then if it rains or gets cold we won't have to go out in it to get something to eat. We can keep what we have in my kitchen till we get the smokehouse fixed. Dr. Coon and I will make plans tonight about building the house, and we will tell you about it tomorrow. We may have to call Mr. Man again before we get it finished."

(Blackie's Big Daddy has found out where Blackie is, and Jay Bird heard him say, the other day, that as soon as his cold got well he was coming down and take Blackie back into the mountains. Blackie doesn't want to go back, and he says that maybe he could persuade his daddy to spend a while down here with him and help him and the other boys to pull off some real heavy stuff that he has been planning, if a whole lot of big and little folks will write to him, in care of This Paper, and ask him to stay a while longer. If he doesn't get a lot of invitations to stay, he will probably have to go back and wash dishes for Bettie, and he says that's no job for a real he-bear. Now if you think you would miss him, say so!)

Brides of Yesteryear Join in 1934 Parade

Alexandria Pageant Arrays Seventeenth Century Watteau Wedding Dress Beside Silks and Satins of Today in Historic Series.

By Frances Parkinson Keyes.

"Wear something old and something new,
Something borrowed and something blue,
And a luck-piece in your shoe."

This was the admonition always given to the bride in the old days, and one she always heeded. She wore soft old lace, shining new silk, a blue ribbon run through her shift, a tiny one-dollar gold piece tucked in her high-heeled satin slipper. Without these trappings she would hardly have ventured to join hands with the young man of her choice, for she was a superstitious piece as well as a demure one, indignantly as she would have denied this.

Last night, at the pageant held for the benefit of Christ Church in Alexandria, most of the "brides" who walked slowly up the long aisles seemed to have stuck to this ancient tradition.

The setting for the pageant was perfect: Two small candles, burning in huge silver candlesticks, stood close together on a stage hung with drapery of Madonna blue. Beside these, like slim fair angels, sat two graceful girls in white.

Four Bridal Epochs.

The "brides" were divided into four groups, beginning with the most recent and gradually going back to those who were wearing dresses hundreds of years old. They made their appearance to the accompaniment of appropriate music. In the case of Senorita Amelita Alfaro, who wore the national festival costume of Panama, a march dedicated to her parents by one of Panama's distinguished composers was played.

The first group—from 1934 back to 1910—personified an aspect of the bridal scene with which we are all familiar—slim, graceful figures molded into snowy, shimmering satin, and veiled in clouds of misty tulle. The girls in this group were nearly all wearing their own dresses—in a few instances their mother's. The attractive dress which Mrs. Eliphalet Andrews, director of the pageant, wore in 1921, was remodeled at the time of the bicentennial to represent a wedding dress worn in George Washington's day. It gave the effect of a costume rather than a creation.

"Sweet Alice" Is Late.

The second group—1910-1890—fell into two divisions—the costumes worn in the decade after 1900 and those in the decade before. In the first division, representing an ornate period, was the white crepe dress covered with embroidery in which Lucille Sanderson became the bride of Morris Sheppard now the senior Senator of Texas, in 1909. It was worn last night by their daughter, Janet.

The dress of ribbon-trimmed striped gauze, worn by Inez Moore, when worn by Alice Action for her wedding to Isaac Gregg in 1901 held up the ceremony for hours because of its nonarrival. It was made by a famous Baltimore establishment and duly shipped when promised; but a nonchalant expressman permitted it to be carried beyond the Alexandria station and on to Richmond, where after frantic inquiries in every direction it was finally located.

In the second division falls the discreet but bewitching steel gray taffeta—rigid of waist, high of collar, with voluminous sleeves, and a gored skirt, worn with a tip-tilted gray hat trimmed with violets—in which Miss Dorothy Ashby Moncure became the bride of the Rev. William J. Morton, rector of Christ Church, in 1893, and which was worn last night by Sara Fauntleroy Carter.

In this division also fall two gowns typical of the elegance of the gay '90s, interpreted in white satin stiff enough to stand alone. One was worn when Mrs. John F. Nugent was married to the late Senator Nugent, of Idaho, at Boise, the other when Mrs. George Barnett was married for the first time. Randolph Richardson, of Fairfax, impersonated Mrs. Nugent, carrying an Argentine wedding fan of white gauze painted with Cupids and decorated with a diamond monogram. Frances Hill, of Washington, impersonated her aunt, who as Lelia Montague had all Virginia at her feet, and who finally bestowed her dainty hand on Basil Gordon, of Fredericksburg; Frances was almost as exquisite as Lelia must have been, her lace fichu curved around her bare shoulders above the smooth tightly laced bodice, her long lace veil floating out over yards and yards of glistening satin splendor.

Tints Change Color Scheme.

There were many wedding dresses in the second group that were not white. There was a yellow one, with bustles and flounces, worn by Miss Evelyn Pickett; two Quaker wedding dresses, one worn by Miss Elizabeth Hibbs Smith and the other by Miss Margaret Teele Fairs, both impersonating their grandmothers; a dress in Watteau style—green with a white front—an heirloom in the family of Emily Newell Blair, whose great-grandmother first worse it in 1795, which was worn last night by Miss Katrina McCormick.

Unique in this collection—and it seems safe to say that it would be unique in any—was the black wedding gown of her great-grandmother worn by Miss Jane Davis, daughter of Senator and Mrs. James J. Davis of Pennsylvania. This taffeta dress is the most cherished attire in the family, and it is safe to predict that when the famous "Javis J's" go to the altar themselves it will be in this original and historic attire.

One of the most splendid white bridal dresses of the latter part of this period was a rich brocade, trimmed with rare lace, worn by Miss Mildred Hill, the daughter of the bride who wore it in 1889.

One of the loveliest of the earlier part of this period—1820—was a corded silk, full as to skirt and tight as to bodice, loaned by Helen Coolidge, the daughter of Senator and Mrs. Coolidge, of Massachusetts, who inherited it from her great-grandmother and wore it for her own wedding to Harry Woodring, the Assistant Secretary of War. It was worn last night by Miss Mary McMillan.

In the last group came the ancient dresses of other lands. First was the festival dress of Panama, originally inspired by the Victorian attire of the great ladies of Spain, and now the national costume. Appropriately and effectively it was displayed last night by the daughter of the Minister of Panama, formerly the President of the Isthmian Republic.

Then came two traditional costumes of the German provinces of Holstein and Schaumberg Lippe, striking, colorful and ornate. Last of all came the costume which the bride of Quimperle, in Brittainy, wears as she has done for hundreds of years, even though on lesser occasions she may abandon it for the latest mode from Paris.

Wren, to Mr. Trustin Brown Boyd 3d, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ingram Fletcher Boyd, of St. Louis, will take place this morning at 11 o'clock in the home of the bride's parents on Kalorama road. The drawing rooms will be decorated with spring flowers, with pink predominating.

Miss Wren, who will be unattended, will be given in marriage by her father. She will wear a gown of soft pink, made with a slight train and long loose sleeves. Her small close-fitting turban will be of the same shade of pink. Her only ornament will be a sapphire and diamond ring, a gift of the bridegroom, which had belonged to his mother. Miss Wren will carry a bouquet of pink roses and lilies of the valley.

Mr. Frederick Johannes, jr., of Smithtown, Long Island, will serve Mr. Boyd as best man.

Following the ceremony there will be a small breakfast for the immediate families. The wedding of Miss Gladys Brewood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ross F. Brewood, to Mr. Kenneth A. Orren, son of Mr. and Mrs. Davis J. Orren, of St. Paul, Minn., took place Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. James B. Fenton, of Chicago, a cousin of the bride, before an improvised altar banked with Easter lilies, palms and ferns.

Mr. Brewood gave his daughter in marriage. She wore a gown of white satin made on princess lines.

The bridesmaids were Miss Marie Noone, of Bridgeport, Conn., Miss Gertrude Parke, of Detroit, and Miss Elizabeth Borden, of Washington.

Following the ceremony there was a reception, after which Mr. and Mrs. Orren left on their wedding trip, the latter wearing a smart ensemble of navy blue with white accessories.

After May 15 they will make their home in St. Paul, where Mr. Orren is a practicing attorney.

Mother-in-Law of King Tut Called Modern Girl's Model

Egyptian Nefertiti, Who Lived 1350 Before Christ, Named One of History's Loveliest Women; She Resembles Hepburn, Too.

MODERN girls could not do better than to take as their model Nefertiti, mother-in-law of Tut-ankh-Amen, who lived on the banks of the Nile 1,350 years before Christ.

Both Lorado Taft, famous sculptor, and Dr. George S. Duncan, authority on Egyptology, hold this view. Mr. Taft recently called Nefertiti "one of the loveliest girls in world history," and predicted beauties of the future would return to her type. Dr. Duncan, professor in the graduate school of American University, yesterday agreed with Mr. Taft and produced a picture of a bust of the Egyptian beauty to prove his point.

Resembles Hepburn.

Despite an absurd headdress, Nefertiti presents a beautiful profile in her bust portrait. Her delicate brows, finely chiseled lips, lean neck and boney cheeks are not unlike Katharine Hepburn's features, which, according to Neysa McMein, presage the beauty standard of the coming generation.

Dr. Duncan explained that the name "Nefertiti" meant "the beautiful one has come."

"It indicates she was lovely even as a child," he said. "And, judging from her bust portrait, she certainly lived up to her name."

"The elegant art of her day has preserved nothing more gracious than this bust. The delicacy of its modeling, the grace of the subject and the sympathetic interpretation of a beautiful woman's personality has seldom been equaled in any line of art. And, considering the attention she attracted in her day, coupled with the attention accorded the bust today, I think modern girls would have a difficult time finding a better model."

Nefertiti's fame has survived longer than any other outstanding beauty in history. Living more than a thousand years before Christ, she married Amenhotep 4th, who, judging from his activities, was as advanced in thought as his wife was beautiful.

QUEEN NEFERTITI
one of the loveliest women in all history

Original Monotheist.

The first monotheist on record, he moved his capital 300 miles from Thebes to Armana in order to get away from the people who publicized their belief in a number of deities.

Amenhotep must have appreciated his wife's unusual beauty; it was in answer to his request the bust was made. According to the report of G. R. Tarbouis in his book, "The Life of Tut-ankh-Amen," this famous bit of sculpture was executed by a woman named Auta, the most famous sculptress of her day.

"There is no doubt," asserted Dr. Duncan yesterday, "this representation of Nefertiti is the high-water mark of Egyptian sculpture. Its beauty and value is proved by the conflict it has caused since the day it was discovered."

He was referring to the fact that its discovery involved two nations. During the World War some German troops carried on excavations in Egypt without the consent of the English government. Accordingly, soon after the bust of Nefertiti was unearthed, it was secretly carried to Berlin.

Since then many attempts have been made to retrieve Nefertiti, but she still remains in the Berlin Museum. For a time after the war no Germans were allowed to excavate in Egypt because their government refused to release the bust. Now, however, an agreement has been made whereby the statue remains in the Berlin Museum with the consent of the English government.

A Forceful Plea for Unemployment Insurance Made by "Madame Secretary" Over the Air

Miss Perkins Heartily in Favor of Wagner-Lewis Tax Bill.

That there is no rivalry between the newspaper and the radio—but, rather, an integrated relationship—is demonstrated by The Washington Post in its new radio feature, "First Ladies of the Capital." Twice weekly, prominent women in Washington are interviewed by The Post's radio reporter, over a National network. The information thus developed appears on the Woman's Page the following day as a "news story."

Today's is the fourth article in this exclusive series.

By Margaret Santry.

INSURANCE protection for wives and children of unemployed workers was advocated yesterday by Miss Frances Perkins—the "Mme. Secretary" of President Roosevelt's Cabinet—in a National broadcast from Station WMAL, under the auspices of The Washington Post.

"The enactment of some form of unemployment insurance will be the solution to prevent hardships in the future among mothers and children—when heads of families lose their jobs because of depressed business conditions," she told The Post's radio reporter.

Leaving a Cabinet meeting at the White House to do so, Miss Perkins reached the National Broadcasting Company's studios in the Press Building on the dot for her appointment with her radio audience. With other Cabinet members, she had been in conference with the President on his return from Florida.

The famous tricorne hat was in evidence. She wore a smart black tailored dress, relieved by touches of crisp white.

Dynamic Speaker.

Miss Perkins proved a dynamic, forceful speaker in the cause of unemployment insurance, which she was among the first to advocate as a boon to wage earners in hard times.

Her broad knowledge of labor problems, her sympathetic understanding of the "millions who toil" which has made her a potent force in the interests of American labor, are the result of 22 years of earnest effort in improving the conditions of labor and living among American people.

This interest in working people was first spurred when Miss Perkins witnessed the fateful Triangle factory fire in New York City in 1912 in which 148 lives were lost.

When queried as to the specific advantages of unemployment insurance and how it operates, Miss Perkins replied:

"Unemployment insurance has the advantage of insuring to the family of the individual wage earner a small income which will keep them from real poverty. Under it, loss of a job would not leave him and his wife and children destitute.

Would Ease Poverty.

"True, the payments received would, of necessity, be below the average income when employed, but even if they amounted to only a small sum a week there would be an easing of the hardships and the worry that prevail in times of severe depression. Furthermore, relief funds would go much further in supplementing insurance benefits than when used in an effort to relieve the distress of the great mass of unemployed."

SECRETARY OF LABOR FRANCES PERKINS eloquently urged unemployment insurance as a protection for mothers and children, when she spoke via radio to a National audience yesterday. She wore a tricorne.

Miss Santry: "How would these unemployment reserve funds be gathered and how distributed, Miss Perkins?"

Miss Perkins: "The system should be made compulsory so all employers would have equal competitive costs. The funds could be set aside by employers during the periods of good times.

"The plan should require a waiting period before paying benefits. This would serve to build up the fund for real emergencies and rule out minor employment breaks. The number of weeks of benefit should be limited and the benefits should bear a definite relationship to the amount of the contributions or the premiums paid.

"The cost should be assessed as one of the industrial hazards for which industry must provide. Employers built up reserves for payment of dividends to tide industry over lean years and they should be looked to to provide for supplemental compensation to be paid to unemployed workers in the future."

Explains the Advantages and How the Thing Operates.

What Other Advantages.

Miss Santry: "What advantages would unemployment insurance hold beyond helping to protect the individual worker, his wife and his children, Miss Perkins?"

Miss Perkins: "It would have the important advantage of giving purchasing power to a small but steady market for the products of all our businesses and all our great industrial institutions. It would put a bottom to the fall of depression and unemployment as it has done in England.

"Relief is not a satisfactory way to take care of the distress due to unemployment and it is expensive to the country at a time when it is least able to bear the cost. Taking all this into consideration, it seems as if we must realize the necessity of setting up such reserves so in the future they may take the place of the breadline or other charities as a systematic, honorable method of tiding over a slump period for those who want work and lack it."

Miss Santry: "What is being done right now, Miss Perkins, to bring about the establishment of an unemployment insurance system in this country?"

Miss Perkins: "The Wagner-Lewis tax bill now before the Congress offers an important and significant opportunity to American people to provide a system which will be sound and which should prove of inestimable value to Americans in the years to come. It imposes a tax on the pay rolls of all employers of more than ten persons, but they may offset against that tax whatever they contribute to unemployment insurance funds under State unemployment insurance laws.

Up to State.

"It is up to the States to decide for themselves whether to have State-wide funds, industrial pooled funds or individual reserves. They can also decide whether to have joint contributions or only by employers, what employers shall contribute, what employments are to be covered, who is eligible for benefits, what the waiting period shall be and what, above an absolute minimum, the benefit rates shall be and how long they shall be paid.

"I can think of the passage of no pending measure more important to the future of the country's 40,000,000 individual wage earners, their wives, children and other dependents. It is likewise of importance to employers and investors who have the vision to see beyond the immediate present. It will mean fewer losses and a less severe tax on business and industry in the event of a future serious slackening of economic activity. The American people now have an opportunity to pass the Wagner-Lewis measure to their everlasting benefit."

Listen Monday at 11:45 a. m. for Mrs. John Nance Garner, wife and confidential secretary to the Vice President, who will talk over an NBC network from Station WRC. Read the story the following day on the Woman's Page.

Woman's Club in Vienna Cheers Up the Homesick

Mrs. Harold Ross Found Restless American Wives of Studying Husbands; Organized Them and Gave Them Purpose.

A FAIRY GODMOTHER waved a magic wand in Vienna ten years ago, and turned unhappy, homesick wives of artists and doctors who had gone there to study into busy, contented women.

The fairy godmother, in private life Mrs. Harold L. Ross, yesterday sat in her apartment at the Shoreham Hotel and told how she had accomplished the miracle.

"When I went to Vienna with my husband, who was studying medicine there," she said, "I was shocked at the restless, purposeless lives the women led. They had made no effort to organize themselves, and as a result had no social life. Indeed, many of them were so lonely and homesick they persuaded their husbands to give up their studies and return to the United States.

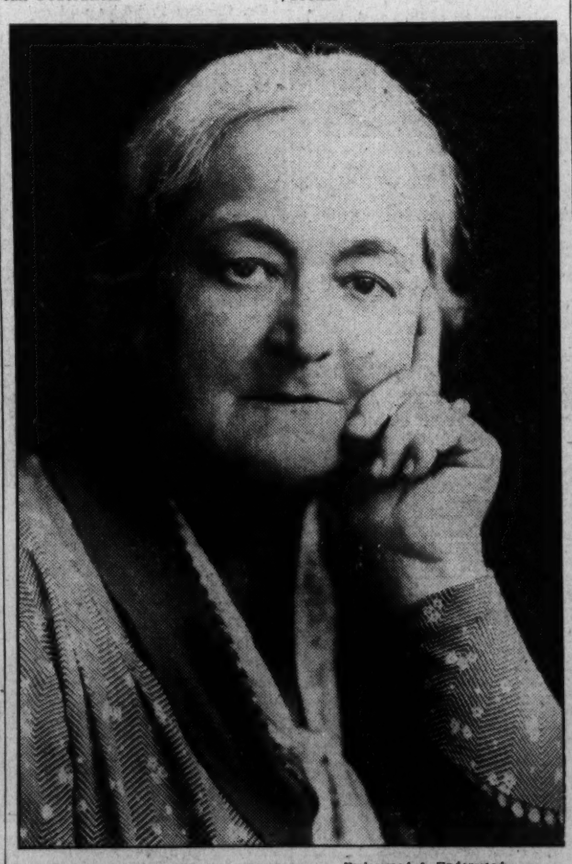
"After thinking about the matter for some time, I decided to organize an American Woman's Club in Vienna. I began the club in 1924 with 24 charter members. Today it is one of the most important woman's clubs in Europe."

The club which Mrs. Ross founded became the model for similar clubs in leading European cities, and today there is a European Federation of American Woman's Clubs, connected with the American Federation.

The Vienna Club, which admits British as well as American women, has the only English library in Vienna. It is actively engaged in welfare work, with the members especially interested in the Red Cross and Salvation Army.

Mrs. Ross, a graduate of Mount Holyoke, has been active in women's affairs for many years. During the World War she managed the Overseas Reserve Hospital, a project of the National Suffrage Association. At that time she had complete charge of the hospital, which sheltered refugees and civilians in the south of France.

One of her most cherished possessions is an illuminated book, with names of important guests and outstanding social functions, given her by the Vienna Club as a token of appreciation of her services. She plans to present the book to Mount Holyoke College to be placed in their collection of rare books.



Underwood & Underwood.

Up From New Orleans.

GENEVIEVE CLARK THOMPSON'S in town. She came North just the other day from New Orleans, where she is a great help to her husband, James Thompson of the Times-Picayune.

* * * *

Mrs. Thompson has accepted an invitation to take an important part in the activities of the big street fair to be given by the Washington Newspaper Women's Club, May 1.

* * * *

Gracious Mrs. Doak.

THERE NEVER was a wife to a Cabinet official more gracious, less high-hat, than Mrs. William H. Doak, widow of the late Secretary of Labor of Mr. Hoover's Cabinet. Mrs. Doak's bereavement has kept her from many gatherings, where she was ever a popular and important figure.

* * * *

With the spring, however, she is emerging a little from her seclusion. A group of friends gladly welcomed her at an informal tea last Monday. She looked particularly stunning in a smart black suit, trimmed in the reigning ruffled fashion with pointed fox, and a beret, the simplicity of whose lines spelt Paris.

* * * *

Mrs. Doak says the lovely blossoms that usually make a colorful quilt of her high-perched garden back of the Doak cliff-top home above Chain Bridge, are not yet in evidence. She hopes the next few weeks will bring them out.

Tale of Persia.

A GENTLEMAN from Persia gave a lecture recently on the various religions of his country. In his audience was a most serious and attentive listener, minister of one of the Christian Protestant churches.

* * * *

At the talk's conclusion, this minister arose to ask:

"Are there no Christians in Persia?"

The Persian thought for a long moment. At last he said:

"Yes, I believe so. But, you see, the World War did away with most of the Christians in Persia."

Colorful Quilts Of Early Days Put on Display

Examples of Feminine Art in Handicraft Made by Quakers.

The romance and color disguised by the quiet garb and demure manner of the early Quaker maid could not be entirely suppressed, and found expression in the striking colors and fantastic patterns of their quilts.

Many of these quilts, the earliest and most typical objects of feminine art in America, were on display yesterday at the exhibit of handmade quilts conducted by the Dorcas Society at the Friends' Meeting House on Irving street.

The quilts are usually made from old squares handed down in the families for generations, in the hope they would some day be used in a quilt.

One of the most interesting of these is made from the squares which the mistress of an old-fashioned "Female Institute" had her girls make in order to teach them to sew.

Another, in which the squares are noticeably uneven, was made by the great-grandmother of one of the society members, after she had become an invalid and sewed in bed to amuse herself.

Everything from homely, everyday objects to imaginary visions of the pitfalls awaiting sinners inspired the patterns of the quilts. A quilt, representing the teeth of a saw, hung next to one showing violent purple contortions on a white background, intended to show the "Drunkard's Path."

Beautiful as an old tapestry was one quilt made in England 100 years ago. The quilt, depicting a Japanese scene in the center, had a border of autumn leaves and a procession of turtles marching around the outer edge.

The love of adventure found expression in the 'Round the World" pattern, made in blocks starting in the center and working round and round until the whole world had been encircled.

The old quilts, many of which have been in constant use since 1788 did not look worn. The materials were mostly homespun, often linen and the quilts were filled with home-carded wool. In some the date was worked in an eyelet stitch.

A handmade shawl, also on exhibit, was used to cover silver concealed in a hollow tree for four years during the Civil War. It is still unfaded and unworn.

Mrs. Roosevelt Holds Recovery And Reform Must Go Together

Speaking Before Audience at Tea at Wilson Teachers College She Urges Understanding of Fellow Men; Novelists Also Speak.

RECOVERY without reform will not be of lasting benefit to our Government, said Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, honor guest and principal speaker yesterday at the fifth of the series of book-talk-teas being held at the Wilson Teachers' College.

"Recovery and reform must go together," she asserted, "because we have discovered that unless we are willing to understand the problems of all people, then we will have to try another kind of government. But if we are willing to achieve that sympathetic understanding toward our fellow men, so that none of us can be happy unless everybody has a chance for security and vision, then our Government will be a success."

She further pointed out that people of the United States are in need of a moral awakening.

Take Stock.

"The real necessity now is for people to take stock of themselves to discover whether they have integrity," she asserted. "Then when we are sure we are conducting ourselves according to our lights as best we can, we will go a long way toward improving our Government."

She then talked informally of her book, "It's Up to the Women."

"I can't say I am particularly proud of my book," she said. "I have always wished I could teach people through fiction because they are more impressed through that medium than otherwise. But I am glad I wrote 'It's Up to the Women,' because it has brought me many interesting contacts. Moreover, it has educated me in a great many ways."

Four other writers appeared on the program. Herman Hagedorn, poet, biographer and playwright, read three poems from his book of verse, "Ladders Through the Blue."

He was followed by Mrs. Alice Tisdale Hobart, novelist, who talked of her experiences in Manchuria and China, and told something of the background for her novel, "Oil for the Lamps of China." Mrs. Hobart expressed the hope that even though this book has a foreign setting it will be regarded as an American novel because it deals with typical American characters and portrays something of the problems of the middle-class man.

Pendleton Hogan, novelist, related some of the incidents that led to his writing "The Bishop of Havana." He also told something of the standards that must be reached before an author can hope for success.

Edwin Bateman Morris, novelist, talked of the advantages to be derived from the book-talk-teas.

The event was conducted by the library science class of the Wilson Teachers College, under the direction of Mrs. Dorothy Watson. Wilmer Bennett, a student acted as chairman, and each speaker was introduced by a student.

Dr. Margaret Stroh, the faculty of the English department, and Dr. Higbee, president of the college, were in the receiving line with the guest speakers.

Mrs. William H. King, Mrs. Ernest Thompson Seton, Mrs. James H. Hanley and Mrs. Stephen E. Kramer presided at the tea table.

D.A.R.s Prepare For Convention To Open Soon

Business Women to Redistrict the Zonta Organization.

OLD FOLKS at home? Perhaps they are, to the outside world—the five surviving Real Daughters of the American Revolution, who range in age from 82 to 95 years. At any rate they will not be numbered among members in attendance at the Forty-third Continental Congress of the D. A. R., which opens here Monday morning.

But to members of the historic organization, these women whose fathers actually fought in the Revolutionary War, are designated always in terms of youth. They are "daughters" of soldier fathers. They will be "daughters" till the end of their days, grandparenthood and great-grandparenthood to the contrary.

MRS. C. H. RANDALL
remembers father's tales of Revolutionary War.

Scattered throughout the Eastern and Southern States, the remaining five of an original body of 741 Real Daughters are avidly interested in the present as well as reminiscent of the past, according to Mrs. Benjamin L. Purcell, Real Daughter chairman.

Who said aged parents produce weakly, short lived offspring? Surely not these hale and hearty "five," who in spite of being born when their fathers were in advanced years, have each already passed the allotted age of man.

For instance, there was Henry Pool, father of Miss Sarah Pool and Mrs. Mary Pool Newsome, of Glascock County, Ga., who was 90 years old when his youngest child was born. His eldest child at the time was 64 years of age. These sprightly sisters were born of their father's third marriage. Now up in their 80's, Miss Pool and Mrs. Newsome, in good health, give promise of rivaling their Revolutionary parent in longevity.

Then there is Mrs. Angelina Loring, of Willimantic, Conn., the oldest of the Real Daughters. Now 95, she was born in 1839, when her father was 64 years old. She was the ninth child of her father by his third wife.

Mrs. Annie Knight Gregory, of Williamsport, Pa., now 91, was born when her father was 74 years of age. She was the child of a second marriage. After her mother's death, her father, at the age of 84, married for the third time.

Somewhere in the 80's is Mrs. Caroline Hassam Randall, of Greenfield, Mass., the only one of her father's ten children now living. One of the "youngsters" among the Real Daughters, she can, nevertheless, remember her father's tales of Revolutionary days.

"I can recollect vividly his descriptions of carrying water to the wounded during the Battle of Bunker Hill," she wrote recently to the D. A. R. magazine. "Personally, I abhor and despise war, but I am a firm believer in preparedness."

The Chautauqua Not Disbanding, President Says

Old Rural Institution Will Continue in "Friendly Receivership."

New York, April 13 (U.P.).—The Chautauqua, for nearly half a century an institution in American rural towns, will not be disbanded, it was decided definitely today.

Threats of financial collapse were averted by completion of arrangements for a friendly receivership, it was announced here by Dr. Arthur E. Bestor, president.

At the same time Dr. Bestor announced a program "more ambitious than ever before" for the coming summer to combat the "rumors that Chautauqua had been abandoned."

Receivers for the institution will be Alburn E. Skinner and Dr. Charles R. Haskin. They advised Dr. Bestor that a petition to the Federal court holding jurisdiction over the case, asking permission to continue programs this year as customary, had been granted.

"We are confident that Chautauqua will continue and come out of the financial difficulties it has shared with other notable educational enterprises during the last few years," Dr. Bestor's announcement said.

A telegram from Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt urging continuation of Chautauqua was received. It read:

"I earnestly hope the good work at Chautauqua can continue. I have always felt you gave great joy and many opportunities to a great many people every summer. Every good wish to you."

Candidate Stands Undismayed Though Clubs Blacklist Her

Baltimore, April 13 (Spl.).—Even though political clubs in Baltimore have barred her as a speaker, Mrs. Margaret Konig Mayhew, Maryland's first woman candidate for Congress, is not discouraged.

"City Hall jobholders tore down the signs announcing I was to speak at one club," Mr. Mayhew said. "They almost wrecked the club, but I'm still a candidate. I'm not going to back out."

Mrs. Mahew is running for the Democratic nomination to Congress in the Third Congressional District. Already in the race are Vincent L. Palmisano, the present incumbent, and John M. Pohlhaus, head of the State Retail Grocers Association.

Mrs. Mayhew's announcement of her candidacy was made last night before an athletic club, after various political clubs had barred her, she said. She is a daughter of the late Representative George Konig, who served the district in Congress between 1911 and 1913.

"I was to speak at a political club last night," she said. "They put up signs around the club announcing I was to speak. Then a couple of days ago, the president of the club got a phone call that six City Hall employes were out there wrecking the club. He investigated and found these jobholders had torn down all the signs announcing I was to speak, and had ripped them apart."

Finding that other political clubs also barred her, Mrs. Mayhew made the announcement of her candidacy before the Athletic Club.

Clothes Rank With Culture, Stylist Tells College Girls

New York, April 13 (Spl.).—College girls are not sufficiently clothes conscious, in the opinion of Miss Rosina McDowell Lynn, fashion research specialist, who is lecturing to college groups on the history of fashions.

"The average college girl does not take sufficient time and trouble with the selection of her clothes," said Miss Lynn. "She does not seem to realize that whatever she does after she leaves college her success will be facilitated by a smart appearance and clothes that bring out her personality."

Miss Lynn believes the field of costume design offers career opportunity for the college girl who is interested in clothes and also in culture. The costume designer needs wide historical knowledge and a cultural background, she points out.

"The college girl," said Miss Lynn, "can put her cultural knowledge to practical use if she designs clothes. She will discover that the Renaissance is not a bugaboo period to be memorized for an examination paper, but an inspiration for sleeves, necklines and jewelry. She will find that Mexico is not a land of perpetual revolution, but a gold mine of patterns and color combinations for use in fashion work. Her knowledge of chemistry may help her in work with dyes and colors."

A study of costume design will help any woman to dress more effectively, Miss Lynn believes. "It will not only help her to choose her clothes with more discrimination," she pointed out, "but will help her save money on her clothes budget or even to develop the making of clothes as a hobby."

Many Varieties Of Glassware Home Essential

Wise Shoppers Allow for Breakage, Buy Standard Patterns.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

NO HOUSEHOLD is considered furnished nowadays that doesn't include a complete line of beverage glasses. And no store offers a more varied and attractive line than one on F street.

Recently a new lot of crystals arrived which are the last word in elegance. From little liqueur glasses to large brandy inhalers, they're absolutely inclusive. One set is an old-fashioned pattern, another modernistic, and the third so simple and nonperiod it would be appropriate in any setting.

In purchasing nice glassware — such as this—the wise shopper will choose standard patterns that are replaceable. Light, delicate glassware chips easily, and a complete set is a loss without available substitutes for broken pieces.

The store will cooperate with customers in reordering at any time.

Simple Pewter.

A pewter ice bowl and tongs to match is always useful.

There are many such sets, but this is quite special. Its plainness is one point in its favor, and a bottom section with tiny drain hole in it is another.

Shakers Out of Ordinary.

Round, bulbous glass salt and peppers are the oddest shakers so far.

So much of one's table service must be stereotyped that an opportunity to find something both useful and unique is not to be passed by lightly.

Salt and peppers in this style are a blessing in more ways than one. Through the clear glass it's a simple matter to see when they need refilling.

They may be easily cleaned by plain soap and water.

Colored Bubbles.

Jewelry resembling large colored bubbles is having a run of popularity in a local shop. And good reason, too. The round transparent beads in various hues are light and comfortable to wear, and are attractive with simple spring frocks.

It comes in double bracelets, clips, earrings and necklaces, priced from 50 cents to $2.

Nothing ever hits the spot quite so successfully as a gift with a touch of originality. So, gift hunters, be sure to stop by and see the bubble jewelry.

Inexpensive Brightener.

A dull room may be artistically brightened up with one Chinese scarf. The particular kind we're speaking of are embroidered in both modern and antique fashion in a myraid of gay colors.

There are all sizes, some meant for small table mats, ideal to use at informal suppers, some for large tables, radio stands, or even bench covers.

They're priced as low as 49 cents and as high as $16.95.

Important Luxuries.

There's nothing like donning the best clothes and going downtown on a purely personal shopping tour to buy one's self all manner of little luxuries. And it isn't hard to do, either, with the supply of tempting things in all the shops.

One of them has a particularly fascinating cigarette lighter and pencil combination. A small top of the eraser end of the pencil is lifted and the flint and wick are ready for use. This is only 25 cents.

Another useful combination is the two-sided cigarette case with the everlasting match attached to it. Once this sold for $10, but now it's a third of its original cost.

Makes Baby Elegant.

And speaking of luxuries—there are some for the baby. A Connecticut avenue shop has some caps trimmed in Brittany lace with dresses to match. There are also carriage covers, and pillow frills, all with the same luxurious trim.

• • • •

Short-Time Sale.

A liquefying cleansing cream which ordinarily sells for $2 is on short-time sale for 59 cents.

Cream of this type purges the pores of dirt and surplus oil in real clean-up fashion. It is neither sticky nor greasy. The minute it is applied to the face it turns from a cream to a soft, smooth liquid.

Lamps for Nearly Nothing.

A local store which goes in for things in a big way is specializing on lamps this week. A batch of them which would ordinarily sell for $15 or $16, plus the odd cents usually attached, are retailing for $7.98. There are low lamps, high lamps, lamps of all descriptions to suit all manner of tastes.

Tasty Chicken Croquettes Require Expert Technique

By Ann Barrett.

FIRST an assortment of not very imposing ingredients—including bits of meat, milk, butter, flour, eggs, crumbs. Then presto—croquettes! The kind that are so soft and savory inside, so crisp and brown outside in the words of screen star Genevieve Tobin—you've got to be where they are.

Mostly it's a matter of technique.

First, have the croquette mixture stiff enough to mold well. Use one part meat, fowl or fish—minced, not ground — one part thick white sauce, brown sauce or tomato sauce. And cool this mixture before shaping.

Second, shape the croquettes smoothly, leaving no holes or cracks for the frying-fat to soak into.

Third, coat them well — like this: Roll first in flour and shake off the excess; then dip in mixed egg and milk, taking care to coat every speck of the surface; then roll thickly in fine, dry bread crumbs sifted. And fry them not more than 6 at a time in fat hot enough to brown inch-cube of soft bread in 40 seconds (385 F.).

With these ABC's in mind, you can have many kinds of croquettes just by varying seasonings and sauce.

Chicken Croquettes.

For example, here are chicken croquettes, which quite naturally start with chicken — 2 cups of it, cooked and minced. To this, add a thick white sauce made as follows: Melt 6 tablespoons butter, blend in 6 tablespoons flour, slowly stir in 2 cups milk (or part chicken stock) and cook till thick and smooth. Then add ½ teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons grated onion, ¼ teaspoon nutmeg. Mix thoroughly, then chill.

Make your croquettes one day; fry them the next day, if you like. Mold them very smoothly any shape you like. Then roll in flour, shaking off the excess. Next dip them in egg and milk (2 eggs, slightly beaten with ¼ cup milk). Then roll them thickly in fine, dry bread crumbs (about 3 cups, sifted). Fry (not more than 6 at a time) in deep fat heated to 385 F. (Makes 12 to 18 croquettes, depending on size.)

Serve with green peas in white sauce or with mushroom sauce. Pour sauce around croquettes, or pass it separately. Do not pour sauce over them. This spoils their crispness.

Salmon Croquettes.

For equally good salmon croquettes use the same recipe (2 cups flaked, cooked fish — freed from all skin, bone and oil — and 2 cups thick white sauce). But omit nutmeg. Subsittute 2 tablespoons lemon juice and 1 tablespoon minced parsley for seasoning. Mix, cool, mold and fry exactly as directed above. Serve with caper sauce (3 tablespoons chopped capers added to 1¼ cups thin white sauce).

Cheese and Rice Croquettes.

Unlike croquettes made of meat, fowl or fish, cheese and rice croquettes need only half as much thick white sauce as you have rice. Like this: 2 cups cooked rice, 3 tablespoons butter, 3 tablespoons flour, 1 cup milk, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, 2 teaspoons grated onion, ½ cup grated American cheese (melted in white sauce after removing it from fire). Mix, chill, mold and fry as directed above. Serve with tomato sauce.

Six Bananas a Day Keep the Fat Away

Johns Hopkins Physician Reveals Diet Plan.

Baltimore, April 13 (Spl.).—Here's good news for those who feel they ought to diet, but haven't the nerve to start.

Dr. George A. Harrop, jr., of the Johns Hopkins Hospital, today announced the schedule of the banana and skimmed milk diet on which he has been experimenting. It's painless and simple.

Here's the plan: Eat from four to six bananas and drink three or four glasses of skimmed milk each day. You may get hungry; if so, eat more bananas and drink more skimmed milk.

After two weeks, you can swing over to a diet of meats, fish, eggs and vegetables—but beware of starches and sugars. And abhor any fats. Follow this for a couple of weeks, then go back to the bananas and milk diet.

You may drink coffee and tea, but don't use sugar or cream with them. Drink plenty of water. Beer is all right too, but if you take a glass of it, lay off a banana for that day.

Dr. Harrop has tried out the diet at the metabolism clinic at the hospital and it worked splendidly. By following the system carefully, some dieters have lost as much as 50 pounds in a couple of months.

What Today Means

"Aries."

If April 14 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:30 to 10:30 a. m., from 1:30 to 3:30 p. m. and from 6:30 to 8:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 5 to 7 a. m., from 11 a. m. to 1 p. m. and from 9 p. m. until midnight.

In your social contacts on this date, avoid making any statements that might be misconstrued as being censorious or condemnatory. It is possible that a person of a very supersensitive nature might consider your remarks to be intended as personal, and consequently get into a disagreeable state of mind, and make you the victim of their spleen. Think twice before making any comments. Be very cautious in making street crossings.

If April 14 is your birthday, you should try to avoid any very prosaic line of arduous work, as you possess a creative ability, best expressed through artistic results. Architecture, interior decorating, or even the creating of a beautiful culinary "piece de resistance," as catering will give the opportunity to do, are fields of endeaver that offer great opportunity to one of your temperament. Your companion in life should also possess artistic sense and appreciation.

The child born on April 14 will, as it grows up, display a lot of good practical sense, and have an eye for anything of an artistic nature. This child should be allowed to express its preference regarding any definite line of training it is to receive, preparatory to any profession or business career it is to follow.

The woman born on April 14 may find it the better part of discretion not to allow herself to get mixed up in too Bohemian a crowd. While their disregard for many of the conventionalities of life, and their resentment for any limitations that laws of conventionality impose, look mighty alluring at a distance, the penalties oftimes exacted are apt to prove too high a price to pay. You will be happier if you get your glimpses into Bohemia through the printed page.

BACHELOR—of ARTS

By JOHN ERSKINE

The Story Thus Far.

Alec Hamilton, Columbia freshman, has three purposes in life—to be worthy of the Phi Phi Phis, to escape the clutches of Gladys, college widow, and to marry Mimi. Mimi has just entered Barnard when her father loses all his money. After a sudden windfall from his father, Alec announces to Mimi that they can be married at once. Later he announces that it is more important to buy a yellow roadster in which to take her riding. This makes Mimi angry and she tells him he is an irresponsible baby. Alec, hurt, is an easy prey for Gladys. She scoops him up and does not let him go until the car is sold. When he returns penniless to Mimi bad news is waiting for him. Woolsey, the bachelor professor, has been camping on her doorstep every day. He visits Woolsey, who tells him he has proposed to Mimi, but been rejected.

Alec felt himself an outsider, not of this scene. None of these, neither the students nor the soporific instructor, had ever had his newly acquired but intimate contact with life. He was sure of that. No one of them had ever fallen deeply in love and had faced a plain-speaking, hard-hitting rival like Woolsey. He must do his work, must he? Gosh! This was the work they expected him to do! In order to prove himself worthy of Mimi—able to find a home for her, worthy to marry her and bring up children, and all the rest of it—he must memorize this drivel about the Egyptians and the Greeks, and hand it back to that pasty-faced instructor at the end of the term, in one of those cheap, sad books, pink or blue. Gosh!

Decides to Preserve Secret.

He knew he'd feel better if he could tell Mimi what had happened, but it wouldn't be delicate. This was between Woolsey and him. He wondered if Woolsey would tell her. That would be pretty yellow! He didn't believe Woolsey was yellow.

As he left Hamilton Hall at the end of the hour Tom was coming around the corner of the building from a class in Fayerweather, and they went for lunch together in the grill. He could see Mimi at the end of the day, when his mind was more settled. For the present it would be easier to consort with Tom, even though the grill was crowded and the smell of cooking discouraged appetite.

"I've just had a rotten letter from home," said Tom. "Your father went to college, didn't he?"

"Sure. 1909."

"I wish mine had! He doesn't know what it's about. I like the old scout, but he tells me what he wants me to do, and I have to be polite to him, of course."

Tom mentioned the compulsory politeness as though it were the ultimate injustice. Alec felt at that moment that the troubles of another were not important, and he was sorry that trivial matters should diyert his own mood. He had never asked Tom about his people.

"What does your father do?"

"He keeps a store in Binghamton. Good business, and all that, but it's a dead place. Know it?"

"Sure, by name."

"That's the best way. No one ever stops there. Sometimes they go through."

Alec would have let the deficiencies of Binghamton take care of themselves, but Tom was looking for sympathy.

"My folks are awfully narrow—you know, too good. They're fond of me and all that, but they want me to be a saint. I took Gladys out one night last week, and a Binghamton man saw us go into the hotel, and he told father. Now it's a hell of a mess!"

"You took Gladys to a hotel?"

"Sure."

Shocked by Disclosure.

It was Alec's first realization of a morality which goes deeper than the law. Hundreds of times he had known of youthful collisions between the sexes—his home town had its share of human nature—but never before had he felt shocked. He liked Tom, and Tom and Gladys did not belong together.

"You don't love her, do you?"

"God, no!"

"Why did you do it?"

"Don't be silly! Why did I? Don't you ever?"

"Not yet." He felt somewhat ashamed to admit his virtue. Tom stared at him.

"I thought you loved Mimi."

"That's it—I love her."

"You don't mean to say it's platonic! Well, no accounting for taste."

Their talk lagged for a moment. Alec was wondering why his love was platonic, as Tom called it. He didn't like to be thought a sissy, yet he felt he was right.

"Anyway," he said suddenly, "it didn't have to be Gladys."

Tom looked up, ready to defend himself, but none too happy.

"You know what a pest she is. She just kept after me and—oh, well, I suppose I wanted her for the moment."

Again they were silent. Tom started to justify himself.

"The way things are nowadays, we'll be 35 or 40 before we can marry. What are we going to do meanwhile? Dad preaches at me, but he's all right. He's got a wife. The same way with these profs. You notice? A prof has to have a woman even if he starves. Jove! They do starve, too! Did you ever see Prof. Barth?"

Alec hadn't seen him.

"Well, he lives around in the dormitory. He's an instructor. Guess they pay him twelve hundred a year, or something. He's thin as a rail, but I bet he could get up some interest in the other sex if they raised his salary."

Ranch Job Collapses.

Alec hadn't noticed signs of hunger in his teachers, but then he hadn't studied his teachers closely. He made a mental review. That English instructor, Billy Bridge, was pretty thin, yet he might be a bachelor. Woolsey was thin.

"I had a swell plan for this summer," Tom went on. "I heard of a job on a ranch—not much pay, but plenty of exercise. Now the old man won't trust me out of his sight. It's Binghamton for me."

"Going to work in the store?"

"Hadn't thought of it. I'll just sit around and mope, and give a report of myself when the old man comes home at night. Hell!"

"I thought," said Alec, "maybe you were trying to earn some money." He went back to his own plans. "Maybe that ranch would be good for me."

Slowly an idea made its way through Tom's sorrows.

"Why don't you come to Binghamton and brighten up the jail? When I tell the folks that you're the modern Galahad, they'll want you right off and then you can stand up for me a little. What say?"

He was trying to be facetious, but he still looked a bit wretched. He repeated the invitation. "Why don't you, Alec?"

"I'd like to, all right."

"O. K., we'll fix it."

Reviews Exciting Life.

Alec went upstairs to his room in the dormitory and sat down with his feet on the bed, to straighten out his too exciting life. That talk with Woolsey and this other talk with Tom, all in one morning! He and Woolsey leading the noble life and poor Tom grubbing along like an animal! Of course, the fellows would say that Tom was practical and Woolsey was just a professor. There wasn't so much satisfaction in living well if professors did it too. Alec hated to be like a professor.

He went out for a bit of air. Just a stroll toward the library. Perhaps even as far as the gym. Something interesting might be going on there. But as he crossed the street he ran into Gladys, walking briskly from Broadway toward Amsterdam. Had he seen her a moment sooner, he might have avoided the meeting.

"Caught at last!" she called cheerfully. "Where have you been keeping yourself?"

He wanted to run away. She looked rather pretty, all dressed up, with a lot of paint on. He thought of her and Tom and looked her over with a new interest and felt a little sick.

"I wanted to explain about your car."

"Don't bother." He tried to move off, but she kept step with him.

"It really wasn't my fault. I left it just for a moment."

"Oh, that's all right. I've sold it anyway."

"But the cop took it away, didn't he? It wasn't my fault. I just went up to my room for a moment and when I came down Mimi was gone."

She had his attention now.

"That girl's an awful cheap-skate! You're wasting your time on her."

"I am, am I? Say, you leave her alone!"

"Ain't I your friend, Alec? Well, I am! I'm warning you. I wouldn't have taken her for a ride if I hadn't known how much you liked her."

She enjoyed his surprise.

Enjoys His Surprise.

"Didn't tell you she was riding with me, did she? Well, she was! She pretended we were as thick as two peas, both of us riding in your car. I left her just for a moment to get a warmer coat, and when I came down she had gone and taken the key out of the car so I couldn't start it. I was still trying when the cop came around the corner. I felt awfully bad, watching from my window, when they sent the wrecker to take it away. It was a dirty trick she played on you, Alec!"

"Think so?"

"Don't you?"

"I think you're a damn liar," said he calmly. "I don't believe a word of that story! She didn't go riding with you, and she asked me what happened to the car. If she had known, she wouldn't have asked."

When he called her a liar he expected to be through with her, once for all. Had she slapped his face, he would not have been surprised.

Gladys stood away from him, and if he had not been, as she said, so young, he might have recognized a world-old menace in her steady eye.

"I'd rather not be called a liar, not when it isn't necessary! We'll just go together to the drug store where that red-headed cashier hangs out, and I'll drag the truth out of her, in your presence!"

"Good-by," he said. "I've some work to do."

"So have I!"

"Aw, cut it out, Gladys! Anything that Mimi does or says is all right with me. That yarn of yours isn't true, but I don't hold it against you. Forget it!"

"You're afraid to ask her! You're afraid it's true!"

He had had enough. "If I want to ask her, I will. Otherwise, I won't. That's my business."

Then, it must be confessed, he ran away. He moved toward the library steps so fast that to keep up with him she would have had to run. He almost expected her to make the effort to overtake him. But she walked on toward Amsterdam.

Once inside the library, he made the circuit of the corridor on the ground floor, came out to Broadway, past Earl Hall, down to 114th street, and east toward the drug store. He saw before him one more heavy interview that day. He framed a few sentences to begin with.

"Catherine the Great," at RKO-Keith's, "Glamour," at Rialto, Are Reviewed

Russian Drama Forceful Film With Ace Cast

Elizabeth Bergner Scores; Edna Ferber Play a Hit; News of Theaters.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"CATHERINE THE GREAT." Alexander Korda's production for London Films of an historical romance by Lajos Biro, Arthur Wimperis and Melchior Lengyel, adapted to the screen by Mr. Wimperis and Marjorie Deans, featuring Elizabeth Bergner and Douglas Fairbanks, jr., with Flora Robson, Sir Gerald du Maurier, Irene Vanbrugh, Diana Napier and Joan Gardner. Directed by Paul Czinner; released by United Artists. Previewed Wednesday, February 14.

Definitely cataloguing itself in the mind of the spectator as a companion picture to "The Private Life of Henry VIII," this latest Alexander Korda production for London Films provides a further bit of tangible evidence that the British threat to the artistic supremacy of Hollywood no longer may be ignored.

As an authentic historical document, implicitly keeping faith with the characters, the events and the period with which it deals, "Catherine the Great" possesses neither the dramatic power nor the convincing realism of its predecessor.

Perhaps outweighing either of these considerations is the fact that this largely idealized pictorial representation of a troubled era in the imperial Russian court introduces to the American screen one of the most remarkable of Europe's contemporary young actresses in the person of Elizabeth Bergner and reveals Douglas Fairbanks, jr., as an actor of more mature stature than he has ever been given credit for in his own country. The performances of these two transcend and do much to efface any recollection of the flagrant inaccuracies that become discernible as the action progresses. Miss Bergner's is the greater glory.

A Shy Princess.

Beginning with her introduction to the Court of the Czar of all the Russias as a timid, socially untutored and instinctively shy, but shrewd, little German princess, "Catherine the Great" deals sympathetically, humorously, and at times much too flamboyantly with the subsequent career of power carved for herself by the courageous and utterly competent consort of the mad Grand Duke Peter.

It is in this role that Elizabeth Bergner discloses the wide breadth of artistry, the illuminating command of both pantomime and speech and the extraordinary ability to project a personality of depth, power and charm upon the screen that seem destined to place her name high upon the brief list of feminine stars whose histrionic equipment is complete.

The Peter III etched in soft tones and swathed in satins by the junior Fairbanks wanders a little farther away from the written records of history. Fairbanks, fil, plays him as a sort of petulant Hamlet, imbued with all the social graces, as well as a lunatic mind and a madman's temper. In point of fact, it is susceptible of reliable corroboration that Peter was so warped mentally and so loathesome physically that Catherine fainted when first they met. There is scant implication of any of this in the Fairbanks portrayal.

Romance, Intrigue, Tragedy.

There is, however, in the combined performances of these two a complete and imposing realization of all the glamorous romance, adventure, intrigue and eventual tragedy inherent in the debauched opulence of a disjointed and remote court life, predicated upon the questionable governmental theory of an absolute personal despotism.

The mammoth and magnificent settings frequently so overwhelm the events for which they are intended merely to afford background as to create an exaggerated and specious theatricalism. There are, from time to time, too many interminably long halls, with too many slowly swinging doors opening upon empty vistas for no other reason than finally to build up an impressive entrance for Catherine or some functionary of her royal palace.

There are, too, on the other hand, some exceptionally adroit employments of masses of people and mobilized troops to lend point and color to the story. Photographically, the picture is a thing of variety and splendor.

Cast Little Known.

The supporting cast, in large measure, is unknown to American audiences. Flora Robson, whether widely known on this side or not, turns in an intelligent, forceful and thoroughly effective character portrayal in the role of the Dowager Empress Elizabeth, and the late Sir Gerald du Maurier, whose death occured only a day or two ago, is no less efficient in his impersonation of Lecocq, the empress' confidential adviser. Many others contribute generously to a well-balanced ensemble.

"Screen Snapshots," "Shanghaied Mickey" and the RKO-Pathe News are the brief short-reel subjects chosen to supplement a feature that will largely fulfill the eager anticipation with which it has been awaited.

By special delivery comes word from Manager Stephen E. Cochran in New York that the time limit for regular patrons of the National Theater Players to renew the season reservations they held last year will expire with close of business tomorrow, Saturday, April 14. Beginning next Monday, April 16, new reservations will be booked. No advance payment will be necessary. The tenth annual spring and summer season of the players will begin at the National on Monday night, April 30. The opening bill will be "The Pursuit of Happiness," still a current hit on Broadway, to be followed the second week by "Her Master's Voice," the Clare Kummer comedy which was presented here last season prior to its New York hit, with Laura Hope Crews, Roland Young, Elizabeth Patterson and Frances Fuller in the principal roles. This is another play that will be available at the National Theater Players' modest scale of prices while still running in New York at $3 top.

Actors' Fund Benefit.

Keane Waters, stage director for Daniel Frohman, writes on the letterhead of Mr. Frohman's Lyceum Theater, New York, that the annual performance in aid of the Actors' Fund will be held in the National Theater, Sunday evening, May 6, fourteen months, almost to a day, from the date of the Inaugural Actors' Fund Benefit held in the Belasco Theater, Sunday, March 5, 1933.

The program presented at the Inaugural Benefit was one of the most brilliant ever seen in Washington and, from the list of players announced by Mr. Frohman for this year's, the impending evening at the National will be no less distinguished.

Daniel Frohman, Otis Skinner, Florence Reed, Eddie Dowling, Taylor Holmes, Fannie Ward, Guy Bates Post, Bill Robinson, Ken Murray, Frances Starr and numerous others already have signified their intention of being present, with the list growing steadily from day to day. More of this later.

Sidney Lust, one of the Capital's foremost independent motion picture exhibitors, presumably is in Los Angeles attending the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America—which is what has been meant every time you have seen those initials, M. P. T. O. A. I say presumably Mr. Lust is in Los Angeles because a card, evidently written just as the train hit a piece of rough roadbed down in the Southwest, some where on the El Paso-Los Angeles R. P. O. (Railway Post Office, to you), and bearing postmark as of April 9, says they would be "in Los Angeles tomorrow." At least, I hope that's what it says!

Call of the Wild Note.

"GLAMOUR." Universal picturization of the novel by Edna Ferber, co-featuring Paul Lukas and Constance Cummings, with Philip Reed, Doris Lloyd and Joseph Cawthorn. Directed by William Wyler. Reviewed Thursday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

Suggesting certain story elements of "Morning Glory," "Design for Living," and "Back Street," Edna Ferber has fashioned in "Glamour" a human document of a woman mistakingly following the will-o'-the-wisp—the glamour of the theater and its personnel—rather than a truer and more rational course to love and happiness.

It is apparent from the outset that Linda Fayne is infatuated with the stage and those who may be instrumental in helping her on to fame. But in her marriage to Victor Banki, the composer, she has mistaken glamour for love, so that when the younger and more alluring Lorenzo Valenti, singer and dancer, comes along, she divorces Victor and marries Lorenzo.

Back to First Love.

In her associations with Victor, however, the seeds of true love have been sown, and when Linda finds him down and out—lacking her inspiration, he has been able to turn out nothing but unacceptable junk—she returns to the composer.

Trite as the story may appear, thus baldly recited, as it is unreeled it becomes a convincing tale of the inadequacy of judgments based on externals alone. For, in this woman's struggle for success in the business of living, is mirrored a common experience—the misvaluation of the worth of the tinsel and gilt which garishly adorn human activity.

To the role of Linda—a part that requires the combined attributes of a Katharine Hepburn, Lynne Fontanne and Irene Dunn—Constance Cummings brings only a modicum of those qualities, but she manages to turn in a sufficiently workmanlike performance to make the character seem real and harassed by real troubles.

Paul Lukas Best.

Opposite Miss Cummings is Paul Lukas, who, as the composer, self-sacrificing and of true love, turns in the finest bit of the picture, a role which still further advances him among the ranks of the screen's better strong, silent and suffering men.

In the supporting cast, Philip Reed has the part of the singer-dancer raised to stardom; David Dickinson, the small son of Mr. Lukas and Miss Cummings; Joseph Cawthorn, the entrepreneur, who is wiser in the ways of the world (and men and women) than either of the principals; Alice Lake, Yola D'Avril, Wilson Burge and Phil Teed.

The auxiliary program is headed by "Heartburn," a marital tangle with Sterling Holloway, who can get more comedy from his eyes, hands and pantomime than anyone else, save only ZaSu Pitts. Universal News, with Graham McNamee discoursing on New York's Army Day parade, rounds out the program.

Straight From the Studios

Betty Furness Recalled to Coast for New Contract; Toby Wing Deserts Studio to Nurse Sister; Flashed on Hollywood Boulevard.

By Grace Kingsley.

Hollywood, April 12.—Betty Furness, the girl whose picture, in a school class photo, launched her on the screen, was yesterday placed under contract by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Miss Furness, who had been under contract to R. K. O., where she appeared opposite Richard Dix and other stars, had left that studio for the East and M. G. M. brought her back to the Coast.

WILL ROGERS.

She was attending Miss Bennett's fashionable school at Millbrook, N. Y., when her face in a class photo attracted the attention of a studio executive, and she came to Hollywood to appear successfully in "The Great Jasper," "Scarlet River," "Aggie Appleby," "Emergency Call," "Maker of Men," and other pictures.

Her first work under her new contract has not yet been decided upon.

Toby As A Nurse.

Toby Wing, Paramount player, turned nurse today to care for her sister, Mrs. William Haggin Perry, nee Pat Wing, and, until her marriage, busy in motion pictures.

Pat, it was disclosed, is at the Wing Beverly Hills home, recovering from injuries received a few days ago in an automobile crash. The former actress suffered an 8-inch laceration on her forehead, several scalp cuts and a dislocated knee. She may require a skin-grafting operation to cover the forehead scar.

Toby expects to be on hand to care for her sister, the two having been inseparable before Pat's marriage.

Will Rogers Advises.

Peggy Wood's small son, David, got his first glimpse of his mother working before a moving-picture camera the other day during the filming of a scene for Will Rogers' "Merry Andrew."

"Going to be an actor, David?" Rogers asked him.

"No; because I can't make a quick change," David answered seriously. "I dress too slow."

"Better be a cowboy, then," Rogers advised. "Then you just wear the same outfit all the time."

"And the fact of the matter is," explained his fond mamma, "David some time ago decided to become a range finder. Well, we shall see."

Mrs. Norton To Back Fund For Hospital

Will Oppose D. C. Cut in Tax Rate, Push Fight on Tuberculosis.

Southwest Market, Chain Bridge Cash Also to Be Urged.

Several amendments designed to increase the size of the District's 1935 budget above the $32,000,000 recommended by the House Appropriations sub-committee will be proposed when the bill is acted on in the House next week.

In addition, Representative Ditter (Republican), of Pennsylvania, a member of the sub-committee, will have support when he raises a point of order against the proposed tax rate reduction from $1.50 to $1.20.

Chairman Norton of the House District Committee revealed yesterday that she would make a determined fight to include an appropriation of $2,000,000 or more to build a new tuberculosis hospital and expand the District's facilities for combatting the disease.

Oppose Tax-Rate Cut.

Mrs. Norton has had considerable experience in welfare work in New Jersey, and particularly aided in lowering the death rate for tuberculosis in her State.

"I do not believe in lowering taxes at the price of human misery," she said in explaining why she would oppose the tax-rate cut and urge a much larger appropriation for tuberculosis prevention and cure.

Representative Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, announced that he also would oppose the tax-rate cut and would seek to amend the bill so as to add $23,000 for improving the Southwest Farmers' Market and $10,000 to conduct a survey preparatory to replacing Chain Bridge.

Both of the latter items have been asked by the District Commissioners and are pending before the Budget Bureau as supplemental estimates.

P. U. C. Slash Hit.

Meanwhile the Public Utilities Commission was gaining support in its fight to restore the $37,000 lopped from its estimates.

While Ditter has announced that he will move to restore the estimate on the ground that the consuming public would suffer from a "crippling" of the regulatory work of the commission, several members of the House District Committee and other representatives interested in District affairs have indicated they will support the motion.

Radio Merely Peanut Vendor, Says Educator

System Should Be Used to Spread Culture, Dr. Tyler's View.

Radio should be used as "an instrument for spreading culture rather than as a peanut vendor," Dr. Tracy F. Tyler, educator, told a conference on radio control at George Washington University yesterday.

Discussing the question "Should the United States Adopt the British System of Radio Control?" Dr. Tyler said there is "evidence of growing dissatisfaction on the part of the American public with present broadcasting."

American broadcasting methods were championed by Dr. Henry Adams Bellows, vice president of the Columbia Broadcasting System, who held that commercial sponsorship has placed some of the finest talent on the air. "Most of the complaints as to radio programs come not from the public, but from those who like to tell people what is good for them—from professional reformers," he said.

Senator Clarence C. Dill, of Washington, will speak at a luncheon today for delegates at the Press Club.

First Lady Accepts Invitation To Cherry Blossom Reception

250,000 Visitors Expected to Visit Washington for 3-Day Fete.

Invitation of the Cherry Blossom Festival committee to attend the reception and ball at the Mayflower Hotel, which closes the fete here on April 21, was accepted officially late yesterday by Mrs. Roosevelt.

Arriving at about 10:30 p. m., the First Lady will be escorted to a private box, where she will watch the dancers. Previously she consented to sponsor the sunrise ceremony in the Tidal Basin April 19. The receiving line at the reception will include Vice President and Mrs. Garner, the Speaker of the House and Mrs. Rainey, Senator and Mrs. William H. King, of Utah; Representative Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey, and Commissioner and Mrs. Melvin C. Hazen.

Railroads estimated that this week-end 50,000 persons, traveling by rail alone, would visit the Capital to see the blossoms.

Expect 250,000 Visitors.

It is estimated the total number of visitors who will come here next week and during the festival will exceed 250,000.

Meanwhile the question of whether Miss Eleanor Roosevelt, daughter of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, should ride in the parade was exciting lively controversy between Gen. Amos A. Fries, U. S. A., retired, and Brig. Gen. William E. Horner, U. S. A., retired.

Gen. Fries is chairman of the parade committee and Gen. Horner is chairman of the committee on the reception and ball.

No provision for a float for the queen has been made in the parade, which is scheduled April 20, and no invitation has been issued Miss Roosevelt and her attendants to take part in the parade, it was learned yesterday.

"What is the use of having a queen of the festival without having the queen in the parade?" inquired Gen. Fries yesterday.

"No," Says Horner.

"She certainly should not ride in the parade, nor should any of her attendants," replied Gen. Horner. "It would be most inappropriate."

Miss Roosevelt said yesterday that she had not been asked to ride in the parade, and that she was leaving the matter in the hands of the officials.

Two train bearers and a crown bearer for the coronation of the Queen were announced yesterday by the committee. Each is 10 years old.

They are Elizabeth Goring Bliss, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Goring Bliss, and Grace Colgate Rumbough, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wright Rumbough, train bearers, and Betsy Baker, daughter of Comdr. and Mrs. Scott Baker, crown bearer.

Four Cups Prizes.

Machinery for handling the large number of visitors who will throng the streets of the Capital during the festival has been thrown into high gear, the American Automobile Association announced yesterday. Already the vanguard of the tourists has arrived.

Predicting that the incoming travel during the festival will exceed all previous records, the association announced yesterday that it was ready to meet all service demands of residents and visitors.

The parade committee announced last night that four large cups would be awarded participants in the procession. One of these will go to the float judged the most artistic and another will be awarded the float winning second place. A cup will be given the best marching unit and another the best band.

D. C. to Convert Health School Into Hospital

150 Beds to Be Added for Tuberculosis Cases' Use.

One hundred and fifty beds will be added to the capacity of Tuberculosis Hospital through use of the adjacent health school building, District Commissioner George E. Allen said last night.

The special tuberculosis committee named by the Commissioners is making a study of the suitability of this building, Allen said. He added he believed the plan would be practicable.

The tubercular children who now attend the health school would be transferred to the District's hospital for child victims at Glendale, Md. They would be hospitalized as well as taught there.

This health school is the "certain building" which Dr. William C. Fowler, District health officer, would not identify Thursday following the first meeting of the special committee.

Commissioner Allen last night ordered workers from the District repair shop to go to the building this morning and confer with Dr. Prentiss Wilson, president of the District Medical Society, about repairs needed to convert the structure.

Auto Hits Woman, Injured Seriously

Motorist and Son Fight After Accident.

Struck by an automobile as she alighted from a street car late yesterday, Mrs. Alice Stanisci, 44, of the 600 block of D street southeast, was critically injured.

Mrs. Stanisci's son, Richard, 22, and Gail D. Watt, 22, a seaman at the Naval Receiving Station, said by police to be the driver of the automobile, engaged in a fist fight following the accident. Police separated them. Watt was taken into custody pending the outcome of the victim's injuries.

At Casualty Hospital physicians said Mrs. Stanisci had received a possible skull fracture, fractures of her left leg and arm and severe bruises and lacerations.

Nothin' to Them Prize Pups, Just Sissies, Says Mauler Mike

Imagine Knowin' Who Your Parents Were! They Do at Show.

The city editor wanted the dog show covered from a brand new "angle."

The reporter had seen a lot of dog shows. They all looked alike to him. So he went out and sought his old friend, Mike, a full-blooded airdale bull hound.

"Now that you ast me," began Mike, "maybe I can give you a few pernters. (Brookleynese for pointers.)

"Not havin' anything else to do last p. m. and lookin' for a chanct to nose around a bit and maybe make me a few contacts that'd stand me in good when I starts me career, I ankles over to the Washington Auditorium to catch an eyeful of what us dogs looks like when we're havin' a show.

"I slips in while the gent at the door is talkin' to a dame and right away, Reggie, I sees where this ain't no place for a guy like me.

"Flock of Sissies."

"There ain't a real dog in the joint, Reggie, just a bunch of stuckups, a flock of sissies all powdered and brushed and curled and combed until it'd make you sick to see 'em. Little Lord Faulteroys, that's what they was, with their paws manicured and not a flea between them. And the names they gives 'em—Barrington of Milenick by Downderry Volunteer out of Queen's Snow Ball of Milenick. Robin Rampler of Tafforale by Tommy Tittlemouse of Pastorale. Can you tie it? And me not even knowin' who me father and mother was.

"Champeens, they calls 'em, champeens! Fine champeens they'd be if any of 'em ever got loose down here on Fo'rt street, eh, Reggie? They don't do nothing but sit around all day in a cage and look pretty. Some of 'em sleeps all the time. And most of the others just sits there on their withers an yaps.

"And eat? You should see 'em. Nothing but A No. 1 hamburg and biscuits. I snitched me a couple of bites when no one was lookin' and it was plenty good. The guy I swiped it from never missed it. Full to the gills, he was. No pickin' over kitchen leavins for those guys, and no pokin' their beezers into garbage cans when the pickins is thin, neither.

"Ever now and then a gent comes and ties a yanker to their necks and takes 'em to a ring. Theys a lot of people lookin' on and they prances around actin' like they owned the wolld. A guy in the ring looks 'em all over and the purps that's powered and curled the best gets a ribbon. Get that, Reggie? A ribbon.

Bird Chasers.

"They was a bunch of pointers and setters there and they tell me that them pooches just loves to chase boids. Can you imagine a guy chasin' boids when there's a good fight and plenty of cats to be had for the askin'? They was just about the snootiest of the bunch, too.

"They was one dog there that looked like he could handle his jaws pretty well in a scrap. Klondike of Nome was his moniker and he was plenty big. But they tell me he sings on the radio once in a while. One of them crooners and just a shell, probably, just a shell.

"I did meet one guy I coulda' got along with. Charmac Wealthy was his name. He knew who his parents was, too, but that didn't make no difference to him. He was democratic. I gets to talkin' with him an' he tells me he's a beedle hound and he's making chasin' rabbits his career. Now me, I could go for that, chasin' rabbits.

"But just about when we's gettin' friendly along comes a bozo and carts me out. I could of nipped his mitt easy, but I didn't care. I was about fed up with the place anyway.

"Say, who ever gave you a moniker like Reggie?"

Roberts Post Blocks Keech Confirmation

King Airs Understanding for Action on Both at Same Time.

Utilities Commission Has Been Restricted by Delays.

Confirmation of Richmond B. Keech as a member of the Public Utilities Commission has been delayed a month because of "an understanding" that William A. Roberts, special assistant corporation counsel, would be named peoples' counsel, Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Judiciary subcommittee, revealed yesterday.

Senator King predicted that Roberts' appointment would be forthcoming next week, or as soon as President Roosevelt found time to act on it.

"It was understood," he said, "that Roberts' appointment would be acted on at the same time as Keech's."

Serving Unofficially.

As a result of this "understanding," Keech has been waiting a month for Senate confirmation of his appointment, and the Public Utilities Commission has been restricted to one full-time member while important utility problems await solution.

Keech's term as people's counsel expired February 25. He was named a member of the commission on March 19. Since then he has been acting in an unofficial capacity as an aid to the commission although he has drawn no salary since February 25.

It was rumored at the time Keech was named on the commission that Roberts would be given the people's counsel job, and Senator King yesterday expressed confidence the appointment would be made.

Consolidation Suggested.

During hearings before the House District Appropriations sub-committee Melvin C. Hazen, chairman of the Board of District Commissioners, suggested that the jobs of people's counsel and special assistant corporation counsel be consolidated, to save the District $7,000 a year. The committee did not accept the suggestion.

Dodgers Blast 3 Pitchers for 17 Hits to Triumph Over Nats, 5 to 4

Game Is Won Off Russell In Ninth

Third Nats Pitcher Gives Eight Hits in Last Two Innings.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post).

ALONG about the cocktail hour yesterday afternoon the Nats' pitching turned sour and the Brooklyn Dodgers began spraying base hits all over the premises at Griffith Stadium to win a 5-4 ball game before a handful of customers who were rooted to their seats by the Arctic weather, which needed only Admiral Byrd and his dog team to complete the frigid scene.

Something breathed a spark of life into the Nats' own batting attack, but their ten hits were nothing to compare with the 17 luscious wallops of the Dodgers off the combined offerings of Earl Whitehill, Al Crowder and Jack Russell, with the emphasis on Russell, who saw the ball game crash down about his ears in an eighth-inning eruption that netted two Brooklyn runs and a ninth-inning uprising that won the ball game.

The Nats attempted to stay in the ball game by dispatching three base hits to the distant corners at odd moments, but these lengthy wallops by Fred Schulte, Joe Cronin and Joe Kuhel were few and far between compared to the drumfire of the Dodgers' attack against Russell when the young man was having no more success than a snowball in Key West.

Tie Score at 4 to 4.

The Nats went down fighting, if that's any comfort, with a two-run uprising in the eighth that tied the score at 4 to 4, after the Dodgers had untied a 2-to-2 deadlock, but Russell permitted the Brooklyn boys to resume their intimacy with his pitching in the ninth and the game was won in this wise:

One Ray Lucas, a third-string pitcher, started off the ninth with a single off Russell that netted him a dirty look from the Nats' pitcher. One Outen ran for Lucas and was sacrificed to second by Taylor. Then along came Jimmy Jordan, the shortstop, who had been batting out hits all afternoon, to drive Outen over the plate with a single into center, his fourth hit of the day.

All told, the Dodgers collected four hits during the inning, but the last two were wasted effort.

The Nats came back struggling mildly in the ninth, when Buddy Myer singled with two out, but he is still languishing on first base, as far as the game is concerned, because Johnny Stone slammed a ball into Sam Leslie's glove at first base and left Myer to perish there.

It was a pretty battle until the awful eighth, with Van Mungo, who comprises the Brooklyn pitching staff of Mungo, Mungo, Mungo and Mungo, twirling a nice six innings in which his fast ball held the Nats to five hits and two runs. Earl Whitehill and Al Crowder opposed Mungo in three-inning shifts and each permitted the Dodgers four hits and one run.

Brooklyn had stepped out to a 1-0 lead against Whitehill at the start when Joe Stripp slammed a double past Bluege that scored Jordan, and the Nats had gotten this run back in the second when Schulte walloped his triple into center field and scored on Kuhel's single through Leslie's legs.

Take Lead in Fourth.

The Nats bounced into a 2-to-1 lead in the fourth from the springboard of Joe Cronin's three-bagger into deep center, and Crowder permitted the Dodgers to get this run back in the next inning, when the irrepressible Jordan doubled into left-center, and the equally pesky Stripp singled over second.

Thus the game went into the eighth tied at 2-2, and Russell, pitching for the Nats, was all but blasted clear of the stadium by the Dodgers. Stripp doubled past Bluege, Frederick singled to right, Hack Wilson pushed a ball high up on the right-field fence for two bases, and Sam Leslie singled into left. The Dodgers had their two runs, and only an out at the plate on an attempted steal saved Russell from further damage.

As I was saying, the Nats came back fighting in the eighth against Lucas and got the two runs back on a single by Manush, a double by Cronin and Kuhel's three-base smash to the flagpole, but came the ninth, and four more hits off Russell, and there was nothing much to be done about it.

25 Swimmers Are Out For Allegany's Team

Cumberland, Md., April 13 (Spl.).—Twenty-five candidates for the Allegany High swimming team reported to Coach Bill Bowers at a meeting held in the Central Y. M. C. A. A short practice session in the pool followed the meeting.

Track Meets Top Virginia Program

Cavaliers Oppose V. M. I.; North Carolina Host to Georgetown.

RICHMOND, April 13 (AP).—If the weather man will serve up some fast cinder paths tomorrow, Southern Conference runners may show the old fellow some fleet and fancy performances.

Several of the topnotching track engagements will center most of the competition in the races with North Carolina's meeting with Georgetown and the Virginia-V. M. I. duel—a conference test—promising nerve-tingling dashes to the tape.

Baseball will have only a secondary place on the week-end bill, although North Carolina's Tar Heels are placing lots of emphasis on their "Big Five" meeting with Wake Forest's Deacons at Chapel Hill, N. C. State and V. M. I. meet at Lexington in the only conference tilt on the card.

Carolina's defending champions should be too strong for the Georgetown track team, but Bradley and Parcell, a pair of speedy sprinters, will give the Tar Heel aces, Hubbard and Childers, no chance to loaf. McNeill, Keane, Treacy and Doherty, Georgetown middle distance runners, are all potential point scorers.

Virginia's Cavaliers, overwhelmed by Dartmouth's outstanding team, should build up enough margin in the field events to trim Virginia Military Cadets, but "Son" Read's lads will show a world of speed in the middle distances. Capt. Hill Wellford, V. M. I.'s Southern Conference record holder in the quarter mile, and one the South's outstanding performers, faces tough tests, however, in both the 440 and half mile.

Cary Promising.

Hunsdon Cary, once the conference record holder in the half mile, can be depended on to push Wellford in the 880, and Tom Moore, an outstanding quarter-miler, may extend the Cadet star in the 440.

Washington and Lee's Generals open their season against Virginia Tech at Lexington.

Other track meets on the card will pit South Carolina against Wofford at Spartanburg, and Clemson, twice defeated, against a Presbyterian College team which nosed out South Carolina's Gamecocks a couple of weeks ago.

Topping's Rally Beats Lester for Golf Title

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., April 13 (AP).—Two down and only three to go, Dan R. Topping, of Greenwich, Conn., staged a brilliant recovery to defeat Robert Lester, of West Orange, N. J., at the thirty-seventh hole of their final round match for the fourteenth annual Mason and Dixon Amateur Golf Tournament today.

Topping had a 6-foot putt for a win on the thirty-sixth, but missed it and the hole was halved in 3s, but at the first extra hole, Lester pulled his second into a trap while Topping was 15 feet from the pin. Lester failed to get out with his third and he took a 5 while Topping took a 4 to win hole, match and title.

Coach C. H. McOlister started practice several weeks ago. Thirty-five boys reported for the initial workout, but after several drills the squad was cut to 18.

The schedule:

April 14, Romney High, here; 21, Penn Avenue at Cumberland.
May 3, Allegheny at Cumberland; 5, Petersburg at Petersburg; 12, Penn Avenue, here; 19, Petersburg, here; 26, Allegheny, here.
June 1, Romney, here.

McMillan Meets Joe Dusek Here

Youngest of Mat Family Gets Test in Match.

Joe Dusek, youngest and largest of four rassling Duseks, rises to a main-event spot at the Washington Auditorium Thursday night. In his second appearance locally Joe will be matched to a finish with "Jarring Jim" McMillan, celebrated flying tackle manipulator, who recently hit the build-up train here.

Tagged as highly promising by Brother Rudy Dusek and fast rising in past matches, Joe recently surprised by going an hour and 15 minutes with this same McMillan, finally losing out via disqualification when he started roughing it up in characteristic Dusek fashion.

Patterned on the lines of Brother Ernie Dusek and considered by many a sure-fire comer, probably his brighest performance was contributed in Philadelphia recently when he outpointed Sandor Szabo.

West Va. Turf Post Awarded to Robertson

Charleston, W. Va., April 13 (Spl.).—James B. McLaughlin, State commissioner of agriculture and ex-officio State racing commissioner, today announced the appointment of Guy Robertson, chief clerk in the Agriculture Department, as West Virginia's first racing secretary.

Robertson will handle all office details of horse-race meetings, the commissioner stated, but will not issue rules or orders without the approval of the commissioner, who retains actual supervision of race meetings. The new State horse-racing law makes the appointment of a State racing secretary mandatory and provides for payment of his salary from race meeting revenues.

McLaughlin also announced the appointment of Eddie J. I. Brennan, of the Pimlico track, Baltimore, as racing steward for the Charles Town, Jefferson County, meeting May 28-July 7.

Dawson Faces Billy Howell For Title

Each Wins Two Matches in Day; Fielder Beaten; Steward Wins.

RICHMOND, April 13 (Spl.).—Johnny Dawson, medalist from Chicago, and Billy Howell, local star, will meet in tomorrow's 36-hole finals of the Country Club of Virginia invitation golf tournament as the result of today's quarterfinal and semifinal matches.

Dawson defeated Bobby Riegel, University of Richmond ace, this morning, and turned back Chandler Harper, State amateur champion from Portsmouth by a subpar onslaught this afternoon. Howell, meanwhile, advanced by victories over Hicks Kerr and Charley Kent, home club players.

Capt. Fielder Bows.

Capt. Kendall J. Fielder, Army and Navy Club expert from Washington, bowed before Harper's par golf in the quarterfinals, 4 and 3, but Luther Steward, the other Washington survivor in the tournament, defeated two opponents to gain the finals of the second flight.

Steward eliminated Frank Sutton, home club junior star, 4-3, and conquered Jack Howard, local veteran, 2 up. He meets Joe Hittore, University of Richmond player, from Bronxville, N. Y., in tomorrow's final.

As had been expected, the Dawson-Harper duel was the day's feature. The Chicago ace collected three birdies on the first nine to make the turn, 3 up. He was three under par when the match ended on the fifteenth green.

Howell was erratic with his woods against Kent and was forced to go to the home hole to eke out a narrow decision. Kent made the turn, 2 up.

Beats Tommy Howell.

Kent put out Tommy Howell in the morning, also by a 1-up verdict, rallying to win the last three holes after being 2 down at the sixteenth tee.

The summaries:

Quarterfinals—John Dawson defeated Bobby Riegal, 4-3; Chandler Harper defeated Capt. K. J. Fielders, 4-3; Charles Kent defeated Tommy Howell, 1 up; Billy Howell defeated Hicks Kerr, 3-2.

Semifinals—Dawson defeated Harper, 4-3; Billy Howell defeated Kent, 1 up.

Club at Martinsville Becomes Cards 'Farm'

Martinsburg, W. Va., April 13 (Spl.).—Arrangements have been completed whereby the Martinsville Club of the Bi-State Baseball League will be operated by the St. Louis Cardinals as a "farm," it was announced by officials of the local club following a conference with Branch Rickey, head of the St. Louis organization.

The St. Louis organization will send to this city next week a number of players from their spring training camp at Greensboro. From the squads, belonging to Greensboro, Huntington, Elmira and Springfield, will be selected Martinsville's club, in addition to any other talent the local management may seek.

Duffy Asks Freedom So He Can Aid Carnera

New York, April 13 (U.P.).—Big Bill Duffy has requested Federal Judge William Bondy to let him out of jail in order to assure Primo Carnera of retaining his world heavyweight championship against Maxie Baer in June.

Duffy, Carnera's American representative, is serving a four-months' term in the Federal House of Detention for failure to file an income tax return on his profits from Carnera's American tour in 1930.

"Think of Carnera," Duffy told the judge. "I'm the only one who can handle him properly."

The judge reserved decision.

Terps Blank Virginia's Nine, 8-0

Ruble Gives but 7 Hits and Fans Four Men for Second Win.

Maryland Touches Two Opposing Pitchers for 12 Bingles.

STELLAR hurling by Ralph Ruble, who ran his string of scoreless innings to 19, and opportune hitting gave the University of Maryland baseball nine an 8-to-0 victory yesterday over Virginia at College Park.

In an atmosphere more suited to football than to the diamond pastime, the big Old Line right-hander registered his second shut-out of the season over the Cavaliers, holding the invaders to seven bingles, only two of which came in one inning. He fanned four and walked two.

Bang Out 12 Hits.

Fielding of Lyman McAboy, Maryland third baseman, and Cardwell, Virginia third-sack guardian, featured. Each handled nine chances afield without a miscue, initiating one double play apiece.

Maryland scored three tallies in the third on successive singles by Willis Benner, Bucky Buscher and Bob Love and an error by Bozarth, Virginia shortstop. Spencer Chase followed with another bingle, but a double play stopped the scoring.

Two More in Fourth.

Two more scores came across in the fourth when Luck was forced to retire. After Ruble and Willie Wolfe went out, Benner smacked his third straight single and stole second. Buscher drove a safety to left and as Benner made a move for home, Left Fielder Rogers threw to the plate. Benner dropped back to third and Buscher set sail for second. Carter, Virginia catcher, tried to nip Buschre, but the ball hit the runner in the back, rolling to center field. Benner scored and Buscher went to third, from where he registered a moment later when Carter tried to catch him off the third sack. Luck retired after Buscher's wallop.

The Old Liners pushed across their last three runs in the eighth on singles by Willis, Ruble and Buscher and passes to Wolfe, Chumbris and Love, assisted by Lawler's wild pitch.

Browns Drop Gray After Dispute

Is Signed a Few Hours Later With Brewers, St. Louis Farm.

ST. LOUIS, April 13 (AP).—Sam Gray, 34-year-old right-handed pitching veteran, was released unconditionally today by the St. Louis Browns, and a few hours later signed with the Milwaukee Brewers, of the American Association.

Gray's release followed a disagreement with Rogers Hornsby, Brown manager. Gray declined to chase flies in the outfield yesterday during batting practice.

Served With Macks.

Gray has served continuously in the major leagues since becoming a member of the Philadelphia Athletics in 1924. He came to the Browns in 1928. With St. Louis he won 67 games and lost 82 in six seasons.

The Milwaukee club is a Brown farm. No cash consideration was involved.

4 Contests Today For Navy's Teams

Three at Home, One Away Constitute Program.

Annapolis, Md., April 13 (Spl.).—Three contests at home and another away constitute the program of athletic activities for Naval Academy teams tomorrow.

Institutions of the Maryland-Virginia area will furnish the opposition in home competition, the Middies meeting University of Virginia at baseball, William and Mary College on the field and track, and University of Maryland at tennis. The Navy lacrosse squad, 18 strong, will leave tomorrow morning for Princeton to clash with the Tigers.

The Middies anticipate a close meet with the William and Mary athletes, and lacrosse with Princeton also should develop into a good contest. The Tar stickmen got off to an auspicious start last Saturday, overwhelming University of Pennsylvania, 13 to 1. The Navy ball tossers are coming along slowly and are counted to show improvement against the Cavaliers.

Another contest on the home card will be lacrosse between St. John's College and Swarthmore College, of Pennsylvania.

N. C. State Gets Three Hits; W. & L. Wins, 6-0

Lexington, Va., April 13 (AP).—Joe Pette, Washington and Lee sophomore, yielded only three hits to blank North Carolina State, 6 to 0, here this afternoon.

The Generals drove Rodwell to the showers in the third with four hits and five runs, featured by Pullen's homer and Short's triple. State threatened to spoil the shutout when they got men on second and third in the ninth, but Pette struck out the next three men to make a total of 13.

Three District School Nines Rout Foes

THE rip-roaring batting attacks of three of the city's high school baseball teams sounded a steady crackle of base hits throughout the afternoon yesterday to record a trio of the most decisive victories rung up in one day by local scholastic nines in many seasons.

Chief Charlie Guyon's Eastern High artillerymen battered four St. John's of Annapolis College Freshmen pitchers at will to win, 24 to 0, in Eastern Stadium. The Central High murderers' row of Coach Jack Ray slaughtered Charlotte Hall by an 18-to-0 margin in the Central Stadium, and Coach Cliff Moore's pile-driving Western High offensive drove Georgetown Prep into submission, 16 to 1, on the new Western diamond.

Five Hits Granted.

The Central and Eastern games went seven innings, during which their opponents were unable to solve the offerings of the local hurlers at any time worthy of mention. The Eastern pitchers gave but two hits and the Central moundsmen three. Red Mullock, of Western, effectively shackled the Garrett Parkers, allowing four widely separated safeties.

Eastern got off to a 10-run lead in the first frame on four errors, three hits and four walks and the fans started to leave. Central split up its scoring to tally in every inning behind a rain of 19 hits. Western counted in five innings, accumulating 16 safe blows, and Eastern's hit total mounted to 21 for its seven innings.

Mullock, Huck Wynne, Bill Wood, Ci-ci DeStephens and Bill Boundford hit home runs for Western, and Harry Bassin did likewise for Eastern. Nick Pistola's triple was Central's longest blow.

Last Ries for Moran.

Funeral services for C. V. (Uncle Charley) Moran, former director of athletics at Catholic University, who died Wednesday, will be held this morning at his late residence, 1326 Euclid street northwest. A solemn requiem mass will be sung at St. Paul's Church, Fifteenth and V streets northwest, at 10 o'clock. Interment will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

Shields Foe Of Allison In Finals

Texan Overcomes Lott; Lester Stoefen Bows in Doubles Play.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 13 (AP).—Frank Shields, of New York, and Wilmer Allison, of Austin, Tex., brushed aside stubborn opposition from Bryan Grant, of Atlanta, and George M. Lott, jr., of Chicago, today and will meet tomorrow for the North and South tennis championship.

Shields, top-ranked player of the country and seeded first for the tournament, whipped the little Atlantan, who eliminated him from this tournament last year, in straight sets, but was forced to play at the top of his game. The scores were 7—5, 6—4, 6—3.

Starts With Rush.

Allison, the second ranking player, overcame Lott, 5—7, 9—7, 6—0, 6—1. Starting out with a rush, Lott ran up a lead of 5—3 in the first set, but Allison fought his way back to even terms at 5—5 before Lott could win the set. The Chicagoan had set point four times in the tenth game.

After losing the drawn-out, 16-game second set Lott appeared to play indifferently and Allison went on to win easily.

40 Men Seeking Jobs On Martinsburg Sox

Martinsburg, W. Va., April 13 (Spl.).—Manager Arthur Woodring of the local Blue Sox counted around 40 men at drill yesterday, including better than four complete infields, and at a full workout on Sunday plans to make a substantial reduction in the number of aspirants.

Among the new pitchers who stand a chance of making the grade is John Piccolomini, the star hurler for the Bakers' nine last year. Woodring has been much impressed with the lad's work and if he shows the same stuff this week will assure himself a place on the training squad. A number of veterans also are out, including Rube Orem and Paul Ridings, two of the oldest hurlers, in point of service, in this city.

Scotch Foursome Golf.

Mrs. D. W. Bell and Mrs. B. C. Hartig won the Scotch foursome tournament for ladies held at the Manor Club yesterday. The winners had a set of 82. Mrs. R. E. Jones and Mrs. J. T. Powell were second, with a set of 89, and Mrs. W. H. Callahan and Mrs. T. N. Beavers third, with 94.

Hokuao, Workman Up, Wins Bowie Claiming Feature in Vigorous Stretch Drive

Hawaii-Bred Star Made Favorite

Haggerson Fades After Setting Pace; Flaming Mamie Is Second.

Coucci Rides "Double" for Jockey Honors; Gen. Farley Wins.

By Walter Haight.

HOKUAO, bred in Hawaii, found yesterday's Bowie weather a far cry from that of his native island home. However, Sonny Workman's whip made it hot enough for the son of Overall—Waiau and he found his racing legs in time to win The Glenburnie, a mile and 70 yards' test for the better claimers which occupied the feature spot on the Prince Georges County program.

Since his arrival in this country Hokuao, just a trifle below stake class, has made the rounds of the better stables by way of the claiming box. He has run the same for all, reaching his peak in Florida last winter, when he won six straight races.

Yesterday Workman pounded him home virtually a length in front of Flaming Mamie, ridden by Henry Cruz, and the veteran Stone Martin, with Coucci in the saddle. It was the first victory of the meeting for Workman and Hokuao paid a $5.30 mutuel.

Haggerson Sets Pace.

Haggerson set the pace as Starter Milton sent them away. Hokuao and Stone Martin were held off the front runner with Workman and Coucci apparently satisfied with their positions. The leaders ran in this order until the stretch turn, where Flaming Mamie became a threat. However, Workman went to the whip on Hokuao and slowly but surely he cut down Haggerson and then went on to offset the rush of Flaming Mamie. Stone Martin finished a game third.

The crowd was above average week-day proportions, despite the chilly weather, a cold wind that whipped across infield.

One of those hairline finishes which have figured so prominently at this meeting marked the running of the first race. As usual, the crowd had to wait for the judges to have their say. They called it General Farley and Maisson. The margin might have been a wart on General Farley's nose. However, there was no question that Sun Caprice was third. General Farley came from far back to take the decision, after Pete M., Maple Prince, Air Line and Maisson had all had a crack at the lead. Pete M. was a red-hot paddock tip and faded out of the picture early. General Farley paid $9.

Wise Mollie Gets Home.

Wise Mollie outclassed the opposition to take the second from a capacity field of 3-year-olds over the 6-furlong course. The Branncastle Farm's representative opened up a lead of some 10 lengths on the far turn and was being pulled up at the finish. Manager Bill headed the second division to take the place from Miss Glace, a 23-to-1 shot. Wise Mollie rewarded with a $9 mutuel.

Indiantown was the medium of a plunge by favorite players who backed him into odds-on favoritism. The colt made good, too, in a great big way, Jockey F. Mauro having a hard time making the finish look close. Grand Acre, in the thick of the battle from the start, was second at pay-off time, with Bungalow third. Happy Lope set a dizzy pace going up the back stretch but flattened out when the real test came. Indiantown was a $3.50 betting proposition. Jimmy Hunter, Grand Acre's rider, made a futile claim of a foul.

The Triumvir Graduates.

The Triumvir, the highest-priced yearling sold at the Saratoga sales in 1932, finally escaped the maiden ranks by winning the third race at 5½ furlongs. Coucci brought the Greentree Stable's son of Pompey up with a rush in the stretch to outfinish White Bird, the pacesetter. Jack Low, the favorite was third. White Bird drew heavy play despite the fact that he had not been out in a year. The Triumvir paid $10.40.

Catwalk won the sixth contest by a nose from Pencader to give Jockey Coucci a double. Retribution was third, less than a length away. Pencader probably was best, breaking very slowly and running over all but the winner. Catwalk, a 3-to-1 shot, raced close to the pace and took command after leaving the back stretch, but he was a tired colt at the finish.

Johnny Gilbert scored his second victory of the day astride Wishing Star, which took the last purse by a nose, to pay $6.90. Tazewell beat War Tide a head for the place.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

The hardening of concrete is not simply a drying out process, it is a chemical reaction. The water which is used in the mixture of concrete is absorbed, in part, in the chemical reactions which take place while the mixture is setting. The ability to set under water is one of the distinguishing characteristics of concrete. It is defined by one authority, thus:

"While fundamentally any cementitious material may be used in its manufacture, the term (concrete) is now exclusively applied to the artificial stone in which the binder is a hydraulic cement, i. e., one that will set under water.

Strange as it seems, it takes no more upright pickets to build a picket fence over a hill than on the level, as illustrated above, with the uprights the same distance apart. The distance between the pickets is measured along a horizontal line, and even though the tops may be on different levels, the distance between them is the same.

with Bill Bennings.

Dear Al: Bowie Race Track, April 14.

Representatives of the horsemen yesterday presented their recommendations to the Maryland commission for a "receiving barn" as the solution of the stimulation and doping problems . . . those who are singing the swan song for Sonny Workman's career as a rider had to agree that the Capital boy put up a million dollar performance on Hokuao . . . W. G. Merion has claimed Fabius . . . he is not superstitious, having made the thirteenth claim of the meeting . . . there will be a steeplechase each day at Pimlico . . . Max Smart will have a group of 26 horses at Havre de Grace . . . Johnny Gilbert is a hound for saddle work . . . he has been riding hard this week but readily agreed to go to a farm tomorrow to work out several horses . . . if you know what I did yesterday, say nothing, I will see you later. Bill.

First race—The B. B. Stable seldom deals in anything but fresh horses and sends Octaroro to the post in the opener. This one is making his first start and will be hard to beat. Time Enough tired in the stretch last out when on the verge of a victory. Wise Money may make a money appearance.

Second race—Lawless Lady will have to be dealt with in the stretch in this sprint. Has one win to her credit. Seems excellently suited. Texas Tommy, another Bowie winner, should take the place award ahead of Bride Elect.

Third race—Lovesick won three races in Florida and should bring the C. V. Whitney Stable a winner here. She is not too strongly opposed and will have the capable Robertson in saddle. Our Mae's recent efforts show her to be ready to press the top one. Idle Victory for the show.

Fourth race—Chips was closing fast in that last effort over the 5½-furlong course. Today he gets the added half furlong in which to make his dash for the wire. Luck In appeared to be fit the other day, but likes the shorter route. Bickering and Idle Along are both dangerous.

Fifth race—Saluba was hard to beat in Florida last winter and is reported to have held her condition. Jimmy Hunter will do the riding and I see no reason for mistakes. Gay World was a good one at Houston and is a contender. Xerseise is cheap and all that, but has a fighting chance to take it all.

Sixth race—Bub McFarland has demonstrated his ability at this course. I expect Coucci to bring this one home. Chat Eagle, with two wins to his credit, goes for a new owner. Foxland Hall for the minor award.

Seventh race—Catwalk will hardly be sent back after yesterday's smashing win, but needs playing if he goes to the post. General Lejeune has been tuned for a race of this kind. Royal Durbar might awaken to surprise the customers.

MANAGER BILL, slow to get going circled his field and close with excellent courage. MISS GLACE overcame early interference and colsed gamely in the final drive. TIGHT WAD, slow to settle in his stride, worked his way up on the outside, then closed willingly under punishment. PORTFOLIO, a trailer in the early stages, colsed a big gap. MASKED JESTER had a rough trip. SECOND STORY had early speed. IN CLOVER and ROYAL RUFFLE stopped.

INDIANTOWN, reserved off the early pace, moved up steadily in the last half mile, drew on even terms with the leaders and, in a game finish, was up in the last sixteenth. He raced as if sore and crowded over on the leaders approaching the finish. GRAND ACRE went forwardly placed and came again during the final furlong. BUNGALOW slower than usual to get going, worked her way up gradually, then closed with a rush. HAPPY LOPE had nice speed while settins the pace, saved ground and held on well until she was bothered approaching the finish. DANCING MACK finished with a rush and in close quarters at the end. LANDSMAN tired. RUSTIC CUBA was outrun. SMALL CHANGE quit.

THE TRIUMVIR, securing racing room on the inside after the start, gained fast when moving into contention, swung to the outside of WHITE BIRD when straightened into the home stretch and, under severe punishment, was up in the final strides. WHITE BIRD went into an easy lead, saved ground from the beginning but weakened badly in the closing furlong. JACK LOW, slower than usual to settle in his stride, went to the outside for racing room, but was unable to threaten the leaders. STIR raced in the first flight and showed a good effort. SAUNTER displayed early speed. SOURCE CIRCLE raced well. The others were held safe.

HOKUAO, rated within striking distance of the pacemakers, responded with good courage when put to a drive, wore HAGGERSON down entering the home stretch and, under extreme pressure, outstayed FLAMING MAMIE. Latter, reserved in the early racing, moved up menacingly when leaving the back stretch, drew on almost equal terms with the winner in the closing furlong, but hung nearing the end. STONE MARTIN saved ground for the entire trip and fought it out with excellent courage in the final drive. UNCLE DONALD was making up ground slowly approaching the finish. HAGGERSON stopped badly in the last quarter mile.

TAZEWELL gained fast when put to a drive and closed full of run. WAR TIDE, squeezed back leaving the back stretch, finished on the outside when straightened into the home stretch. JUST REMEMBER was rushed hard from the start. He showed a good effort. O'NEILL, rated in front, weakened in the closing drive. KIBITZER went strongly for six furlongs. ARAB had a rough trip.

W. & L.'s Track Team Host To V.P.I.

Loss of Captain Hazell Is Blow to Generals in Today's Meet.

LEXINGTON, Va., April 13 (Spl.).—Loss of Capt. Henry Hazell will weaken the Washington and Lee track team in its opening meet of the outdoor season against Virginia Tech here tomorrow.

Counting on Dunaj.

As usual the Generals are counting on their star distance runner, Dick Dunaj, to help considerably with their scoring. After an indoor season hampered by illness, Dunaj is anxious to match strides again in conference competition. He will run in the mile and two-mile.

Joe Sawyers, football and basketball luminary, is the only veteran sprinter available. A pair of sophomores, Eddie Hiserman and Frank Price, will be his running mates. McGeory and Dick Scully, a sophomore, will compete in the half-mile. The Generals are fortified with a pair of veterans, LeRoy Hodges and Bill

Common Stock Prices Decline; Preferred Up

Selected List Forced Down at Close; Sales Cut to 1,191,640 Shares.

New York, April 13 (AP).—The common stock average receded slightly today after five desultory hours featured by activity and advances in miscellaneous preferred issues and a number of specialties.

Senior equities held the floor through the morning, when a broad list of such issues established gains of 1 to 3 points or more. Thereafter many of them quieted down and some of the advance was relinquished.

In common listings, McClellan Stores, Radio, Radio-Keith-Orpheum, International Cement, Industrial Rayon and Neisner strengthened. Armour and Radio Corporation groups were especially active.

Leaders Change Little.

Such stocks as U. S. Steel common, American Telephone, General Electric, Westinghouse, New York Central, Santa Fe, American Smelting, U. S. Smelting and Du Pont did little. Transfers in Allied Chemical and Union Pacific were not recorded until the last hour, and then both had a thin market, the former losing 2 net, the latter 2⅞.

Sales totaled 1,191,640 shares, of which preferred stocks contributed a substantial proportion.

News happenings with an immediate market slant were meager, although some routine reports bearing on the state of trade appeared. Car loadings last week dropped about 8 per cent from the preceding week, due almost entirely to a decrease in fuel traffic. This was attributed to recent buying of coal by consumers against higher prices.

Building Gains in March.

March building construction statistics reveal broad gains over February and also over March of last year, though it is noted that the contributions of publicly financed work to the aggregate is substantial.

The Dodge organization estimates that in the first 1934 quarter this class of building represented 75 per cent of the total, and nearly as large a proportion is anticipated for the second three months.

Dun & Bradstreet said that "almost without exception" leading retailers throughout the country find no post-Easter tapering of sales volume.

View on Restriction.

Commenting on the general business situation the same review stated that while full credit for the improvement is given last year's emergency legislation, "considerable stress now is being placed on the need for allowing the forward movement to proceed unhampered by new and unnecessary restrictions."

That the demand for credit is showing at least a seasonal quickening is evident from the brisker commercial paper market. The amount of paper outstanding in this district at the end of March was nearly $16,000,000 larger than on February 28 and the increase over a year ago was $60,000,000.

The huge reservoir of Federal Reserve member banks' excess reserves holds, meanwhile, around its record peak.

Farmers Use Bulk of Loans To Pay Debts

Eighty-nine cents out of every dollar of Federal Land Bank and Land Bank Commissioner's farm mortgage loans closed since last June have been employed in the refinancing of farmers' indebtedness, it was shown in a study just completed by the Farm Credit Administration.

A total of over 251,000 loans, aggregating approximately $628,700,000, were closed from June 1, 1933, through March 31, 1934, of which about $559,400,000 was used for refinancing. These figures are estimated on the basis of the study, which covered more than half of the actual loans.

The classes of creditors to whom the proceeds of these refinancing loans were paid, the approximate total received by each class, and the proportion of each class to the total in terms of cents of the loan dollar, are as follows:

Commercial banks, $173,400,000 or 27.6 cents, including about $6,800,000 of debts to banks in the hands of receivers and conservators; insurance companies, $65,840,000, or 10.5 cents; joint stock land banks, $36,300,000, or 5.8 cents; tax authorities, $17,320,000, or 2.7 cents; merchants, $6,000,000, or nine-tenths of a cent; "others," or creditors not separately classified, including mortgage companies, private mortgage lenders, retired farmers, and many others to whom farmers owed debts, $255,750,000, or 40.7 cents, and miscellaneous, $4,790,000, or eight-tenths of a cent.

Maryland's Oyster Yield Rises 13 Per Cent in '34

Baltimore, April 13 (Spl.).—Maryland's oyster yield during the dredging season just past was 13 per cent higher than that of a year ago, State Conservation Commissioner Swepson Earle announced.

Prices were somewhat higher also, he said.

The dredging season ended April 1, and up to that time the oyster men of the State had gathered a total of 1,735,190 bushels, an increase of 205,030 bushels over the total of last year. The tonging season ends in Maryland next Sunday.

U. P. Earnings Rise.

New York, April 13 (AP).—March earnings of the Union Pacific showed about the same rate of increase over 1933 as the first two months of the year, Carl Gray, president of the road, reported.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Campaign to Have the Government Pay Depositors of Closed Banks in Full Is Based Upon Pathetically Naive Arguments.

By Ralph West Robey.

It is difficult to appreciate the ardor with which the campiagn is being waged to have the Government pay in full the depositors of closed banks. This is one problem that it was reasonable to assume might have been solved once and for all months ago, for it came to the front with the so-called banking solution of March, 1933. It was met presumably by the action taken then, and augmented later, in the direction of setting up governmental organizations to facilitate making such deposits available.

From current press reports, nevertheless, it is clear that there is widespread dissatisfaction with what has been done. The demand now is for the Government to step in and pay 100 cents on the dollar.

This would mean that we go back to the first of 1933 and say that all deposits of our commercial banks as of that time are to be paid in full and that this is to be accomplished by the Government contributing whatever funds are necessary to make up the difference between the value of the assets held by the banks and the amount of deposits shown on their books.

The argument used by the proponents of this scheme is almost pathetically naive. Presumably underneath is some vague idea about justice to these depositors and perhaps a more or less firm conviction that they should not be made to pay for the errors of the managers of the institutions with which their funds were placed. It also is likely that several of the more voluble defenders of the plan are not unaware of the possible political aspect involved. By and large, however, these broader questions are left out of the discussion.

The thing that is emphasized is simply that should the Government pay such deposits in full it immediately would serve as a stimulant to business. The majority of the recipients of such funds, we are told, unquestionably would use them for making purchases almost immediately. Hence, were a couple of billion dollars paid out in this way, retail sales would increase at once and this would start a chain of events that would reach from one end of our economic system to the other. It is concluded, therefore, that, granting the Administration wants recovery, the payment of the depositors in our closed banks offers a fertile field for action.

Logic Is Good, But Conclusions Are Bad.

With the logic in this general line of argument there is small room for a difference of opinion. Everyone will agree, I think, that if $2,000,000,000 were handed over to the depositors in closed banks by the Government, business activity would increase. So would it increase if everyone who has lost money in the stock market in the past five years received an amount of cash equal to his losses. And so would business increase if the Government dropped some billions of dollars out of aeroplanes.

It must be obvious, however, that it is not sufficient merely to say that these depositors should have their losses made good by the Government because this will improve business activity. Rather, justification for such action must rest upon the question of why this particular group of sufferers should be the beneficiaries of governmental philanthropy. So far no one has been able to prove that they should be.

As a matter of fact the Government has been extremely liberal in its appraisal of the assets of closed banks and in making funds available for the depositors. Unfortunately, this has not been sufficient to keep a large number of people from suffering losses. The Government, however, has no responsibility for paying depositors in closed banks 100 cents on the dollar. Those who maintain that it has are pleading the cause of special interests just as truly as are the silver and veteran lobbies.

Foreign Markets.

London—A cheerful attitude prevailed on the stock exchange today although trading was less active. West African gold mining shares suffered from profit-taking, but rubber shares were buoyant on restriction hopes. Gilt-edged securities, Kaffirs and transatlantic issues were supported, while industrials exhibited an easier trend. The market closed irregular.

Paris—The war veterans reform ultimatum to Premier Doumergue made a bearish impression on the bourse and prices turned heavier. The closing was barely steady and inactive.

Berlin—Business on the boerse was quiet, and prices declined fractionally with the exception of some industrial and specialty shares, which developed firmness. Later the market became irregular and the closing was generally fairly sustained.

Bonds Press Forward Again To New Highs

Trading in Most Issues Becomes Quiet; Sales, $16,074,000.

New York, April 13 (AP).—Although the bond market was mildly irregular today, U. S. securities advanced smartly and the average for 60 domestic corporate issues crept forward one-tenth of a point, to 87.3, another new high since 1931.

Trading was quiet throughout and, with the exception of scattered loans, price changes were fractional and unimportant. Most of the declines were attributed to profit-taking. Transfers totaled $16,074,000, par value, against $18,477,000 yesterday.

Bankers characterized the Treasury's new conversion loans on which the books were closed last midnight, as a distinct success. The uncalled Liberty fourth 4¼s advanced half a point to a new top for the year, at 104.

Treasury Bonds Gain.

All of the Treasury bonds also advanced 4-32ds to 14-32ds and established new highs for 1934 or longer. The new 3¼s, which will be exchanged for the called Liberty series, were traded over the counter on a "when issued" basis. They were high at 101.28, and 101.23 was bid at the close.

The rails did not pay particular attention to the sharp drop in car loadings for the week ended April 7, and the majority finished with gains. K. C., Ft. Scott & Memphis 4s, on which the interest has been in default for some time, jumped 4½ points in a sizable turnover.

Interests close to the road were unable to account for the rally. American & Foreign Power 5s were heavily traded for a gain of 2 points.

On Advancing List.

Other more active gainers of smaller amounts included bonds of Santa Fe, Chesapeake & Ohio, St. Paul, Chicago & North Western, Consolidated Gas, Goodrich, Hudson & Manhattan, International Paper, Missouri Pacific, Frisco, Montana Power, New Orleans Public Service, Paramount, Pere Marquette, Postal Telegraph, Seaboard Airline.

Among losers of a point or so were some issues of Virginia Railway & Power, United Drug, Texas & Pacific, N. Y. Central, McKesson, Illinois Central, Colorado & Southern and Baltimore & Ohio.

Foreign obligations were mixed. Both Cordoba City 7s were up 4¼ and 6½ points and further improvement was shown by some Japanese loans and those of Chile, Argentina and Latauro Nitrate. Cuban 5½s of 1953 lost 4⅞, but the 5½s of 1945 rallied 1½ points.

Cotton Sinks After Bankhead Bill Agreement

May Closes at 11.84 as General Market Drops 6 to 9 Points.

New York, April 13 (AP).—Cotton sold moderately lower today in the face of the Senate and House conferees' agreement on the Bankhead bill.

While a fair volume of domestic and foreign trade demand was uncovered on declines, there was no follow-up to the buying. July sold off from 12.04 to 11.95, closing at the low, with the general market ending barely steady at net losses of 6 to 9 points.

Mill price fixing for both foreign and domestic account combined with scattered commission house buying absorbed early liquidation and some Southern selling.

Offerings Become Freer.

Offerings became freer after the early demand had been filled and prices eased under local and warehouse selling which may have been influenced partly by early weakness in wheat.

There were partial rallies from time to time during the day on rebuying by earlier sellers, but demand on the bulges was limited. While some differences of opinion were expressed with reference to the Bankhead bill the relative effectiveness of the 50 per cent tax on excess production to be collected at the date of sale rather than at the gin, was questioned in some quarters.

Clear but colder weather prevailed over the belt, with frost reported in southwest Georgia.

Exports today, 4,534, making 6,319,612 so far this season. Port receipts, 16,622. U. S. port stocks, 3,069,462.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil was quiet today, but the tone was steady and prices a shade higher on some months on scattered covering and local buying of May and September, prompted by the rally in grains, which offset the easiness of cotton. Final prices were unchanged to 5 points net higher. Sales were 15 contracts. Bleachable spot nominal; May closed 5.34, July 5.55, September 5.77, October 5.83.

Wool Market.

Boston, April 13 (A.P.). (U. S. Dept. of Agriculture).—Very few sales were closed in the Boston Wool Market. Prices were somewhat irregular because of concessions from asking prices that were obtainable in some houses. The bulk of current small sales were of the finer territory wools. Average French combing 64s and finer territory wool brought 81 to 83 cents scoured basis. Odd lots were offered at 80 cents. Short French combing and inferior average French combing staple 64s and finer territory wools in original bags were available at 78 to 80 cents scoured basis.

The Federal Diary

By Morgan Baker
(Trade-mark Applied For)

Harris & Ewing Photos.

Beautiful titian-haired Miss Harriet F. Reed, of Wilmington, is chosen as a typical Delaware girl. Miss Reed, formerly with the Shipping Board, is now secretary to O. J. Skidmore, Washington manager of the TVA. She is a charter member of the Blue Rock Club of Hillcrest and the F. O. F. Club, Wilmington, and is a Sigma Theta Kappa. Brig. Gen. Herbert A. Deakyne, Engineer Corps, War, is a distinguished Delawarean.

Reproduced from yesterday's last edition.

DELAWARE holds the spotlight today in the Diary's Parade of the States. The little "Blue Hen's Chickens" State is small, but ranks high in American history. Delaware was the first to adopt the Constitution of the United States. And on to the present day, Delaware has played a prominent part in American affairs, industrially, politically and culturally.

BAKER.

Nebraska will pass the reviewing stand Tuesday. All Nebraskans and other Government employes from Wisconsin, Mississippi, Georgia, Ohio, South Dakota and Pennsylvania are urged to call or write the Federal Diary soon, so that their States will be fully represented in the Parade.

Here's to Delaware.

Her boast is not of great size
Of oil or mining enterprise;
Nor yet of herds of cattle, sheep,
Or even mountains high and steep.
But here each year her small farms raise
Tomatoes, peaches, sugar maize;
While oyster beds and fisheries
Together with food canneries
Make this proud Nation even prouder
Of this State's cellophane, gunpowder.
Thus for her size few can compare
With virile little Delaware.

WHEN Henry Hudson came to America in his little ship, the Half Moon, in 1906, it was to find the Arctic passage through the continent to India and China which the whole world believed to exist. It was by him that Delaware River and Bay were first explored.

More extensive explorations were made in 1615 and 1616 in this region by Cornelius Hendrickson. Enormous quantities of animal and bird life along the shores led the explorers to establish a lucrative trade in furs with the Indians, glowing reports brought back by Hendrickson of the Delaware country led to the organization of the Dutch West India Company, members of which made the first settlement in 1631 near the site of the present town of Lewes. This venture was short lived, due to a massacre of all the colonists there by the Indians whom the Europeans had treated badly.

The first permanent settlement was made by the Swedes in 1638 who established a fort at the present site of Wilmington. "New Sweden" flourished in rich trade with the Indians until 1655 when the Dutch of New Amsterdam under Peter Stuyvesant seized the land in a bloodless war. The Dutch reign was short for in 1664 the English took over the region and William Penn won the people's friendship. The area prospered for many years as a part of Pennsylvania.

Delaware was named for a man "of most noble and generous disposition," Thomas West, Lord de la Warre. He came as Governor of Virginia when that colony was in a state of anarchy and is still remembered as one of the most gallant figures of Colonial America.

A State government was organized in 1776 and in the same year as one of the 13 colonies, Delaware signed the Declaration of Independence. Delaware adopted the Constitution in 1787. Delaware is justly proud of its slogan, "The first State in the Union."

Every town and village of Delaware is linked by hard surface roads, perhaps more thoroughly than any other State. A concrete highway completing a trunk line through the State was built at a cost of $4,000,000 by Gen. T. Coleman du Pont as a gift to the State. The State controls all the roads, which are maintained by corporate fees. Receipts from gasoline taxes go to the upkeep of schools.

Industry and Agriculture.

Relative to size and population, Delaware has large manufacturing interests. Wilmington, at the northern tip of the State, near Philadelphia, has most of the industries. Leather and knitting lead. The large parent plant of the Du Pont powder works is in the Valley of the Brandywine.

The State is largely agricultural, with corn, wheat, peaches and tomatoes being the leading crops. Delaware is the second State in tomato packing. It is famous for its peaches, the crop frequently running to 500,000 bushels a year. Delaware oysters and fish are noted up and down the Atlantic Coast.

The Delaware State Society is an active group, although its membership is small. Senator Hastings is president, and Miss Elizabeth R. Groves, executive secretary. Miss Groves is with the National Geographic Society.

DELAWARE'S typical young man in Government service is making rapid strides in his legal career. James R. Kirkland is well equipped, too, to travel fast toward the heights. He holds the following degrees: George Washington University, A. B., '27; L. L. B., '28, and L. L. M., '29, and Bachelor of Commercial Science from Benjamin Franklin University, '32.

Before entering college, Mr. Kirkland attended the Pace School of Accountancy in 1924. He is a certified public accountant and was the first lawyer-accountant at the Delaware bar. He was the first certified public accountant in the Washington district attorney's office. A professorship in criminal law also is held by him at G. W. U. Mr. Kirkland is a Mason and holds membership in Potomac Lodge, No. 5; Potomac Chapter, No. 3; Potomac Commandery, No. 3, and Almas Shrine. In college he was an active member of Acacia, Delta Sigma Rho and Phi Delta Phi Fraternities.

Delaware is the forty-sixth State in population (238,380 in 1930) and the forty-seventh in area (2,370 square miles). Only Nevada and Wyoming have fewer people and Rhode Island less area than Delaware.

"Liberty and Independence" is the State motto. The State flower is the peach blossom, combining utility and beauty, "furnishing blossoms for festivals, fruit for the table, shade for the lawn and homes for the birds."

WILMINGTON, a thriving port and industrial center, is the largest city in Delaware. A Government canal connects Delaware and Chesapeake Bays and was converted into a sea-level waterway in 1927. Wilmington's population in 1930 was 106,500. A model theater in the city attracts many Broadway shows, either en route to or from New York.

PIANO—For quite a few years it has been our policy to furnish pianos, as an advertising feature, to great artists for their local concerts. Naturally, these instruments must be and are the finest made. At this time we are able to offer at a substantial reduction from the list price of $1,650, a Knabe grand that has been used at a few of the late concerts. For all practical purposes this piano is new—but an instrument of this type is extremely hard to dispose of—so to move it quickly we are willing to allow the purchaser a good reduction. Terms can be arranged. Kitt's, 1330 G st. Nat. 4730.

YES WE'D LIKE TO RENT AN OFFICE. I NOTICE THIS ONE IS ALREADY FURNISHED.
YES, THE OTHER GENT HERE WAS...

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. 4-14
OH YOU GENTLEMEN KNOW MR. ABACUS?
NEVER SAW HIM, BUT THIS BOOK ON THE DESK HERE... EASY LESSONS IN ENGLISH... TELLS ME HE WAS WRESTLING WITH THE LANGUAGE.
McNaught Syndicate, Inc., N. Y.
BY JOVE SIR, THAT IS QUITE REMARKABLE BUT....
I KNOW HE WAS NOT TALL, BECAUSE THE SEAT OF THIS CHAIR WAS LOWERED SO THE SITTER'S FEET WOULD REACH THE FLOOR.
MARVELOUS! BUT ABOUT MR. ABACUS LEAVING WITHOUT TELLING ME WHERE HE WAS GOING?
THAT, TOO, IS VERY SIMPLE. GO ON, HERMAN.
THE PILE OF MAIL, SOME OF OLD DATE, ON THE FLOOR AS WE STEPPED IN PROVES MR. ABACUS LEFT NO INSTRUCTIONS ABOUT FORWARDING IT.

THE GUMPS — A Horse of Another Color

WHEN I HEAR THE GUMPS PANNING MRS. DE STROSS FOR SUING POOR UNCLE BIM FOR $10,000,000.— I JUST CACKLE— IT'S ANOTHER THING WHEN SOMEBODY ELSE TRIES TO GET A FEW DIMES OUT OF THEIR UNCLE—
THE GUMP'S ARE SO DIFFERENT FROM THE DE STROSSES— YOU DON'T SEE THEM RUNNING AFTER UNCLE BIM TRING TO GET ANY OF HIS FORTUNE, DO YOU? OH, NO—
THEY WOULDN'T THINK OF DOING THAT— NEITHER DOES A BEAR TRAP RUN AFTER BEARS— BUT IT GETS THEM JUST THE SAME—

Walt Mason, Himself

Eugene Aram.

He lives in legand and in story, surrounded by a tarnished glory. Tom Hood embalmed him in his verses, and Bulwer's tale his deeds rehearses, and many another gifted writer has made a hero of this blighter. He was portrayed by Henry Irving upon the stage, with pep unswerving; biographers, with zeal unbounded, have hunted down his tracks and hounded. Among great criminals he's standing, upon an eminence commanding; his crime itself was base and sordid, and little fame would be accorded for that foul act, which doubly damns him, but for the legend that embalms him. The legend is that he was gifted, above the run of writers lifted; a genius, of all trifles chary, he planned a wondrous dictionary, so comprehensive and so grasping it would have set the whole world gasping. It would have journeyed down the ages—and Eugene wrote a dozen pages; that was the large and firm foundation, on which they've built his reputation. He was a strangely gifted poet, but only his admirers know it; he wrote some rhymes that had no merit, but he was great—his boosters swear it! He planned fine things but always flivvered before the goods had been delivered. He died and left no work behind him to show posterity should mind him, but poets framed a legend shining on which his memory's reclining.
